scored 21 goals and 11 assists in five games. UMass senior Lynn Hartman will probably draw the assignment.

If Krasnoo beats Hartman, it will be up to sophomore goaltender Liz Keats to stop her. Keats has started all five games for UMass and her 12.0 goals against average is nothing to brag about. But that stat could be put into a better perspective if all the players who have walked in alone on Keats every game were counted.

"We end up playing one on one all the time and we're not good at it," Bossio said. "As much as we do it, we're not good at it."

Lax facts: If the clouds decide to spill rain on Amherst this Sunday and the conditions of Totman are inadequate for play, the game will be shifted to Springfield College's artificial turf.

"It's not positive [that I'm out for the year]," Zusi said. "I'm going to have tests [today], but the doctor in New York thinks it's a tear. If it is, I'm done."

Zusi popped the knee before the California trip and hasn't played yet this year. The possibility of his red shirting and coming back to play next season hasn't been ruled out . . . sophomore attack Jim McAleavey has 28 assists (39 points total), one shy of last year. He needs to average just four per game to tie the UM record of 60 held by Charles Hardy (1972).

The Saints are led by pitchers Doug McGregor, 1-0 ERA in 7 innings, and Chris Gorton, 1 start, 2.25 ERA, 7 strikeouts; and catcher Kevin Carroll who, in four games is batting .500 on 7 for 14 hitting. Right now McGregor is the probable starter for Siena against UMass.

Penn State and St. Bonaventure. Saturday's doubleheader with the Bonnies is scheduled to kick off at 1 p.m., and the Penn St. games are set for Sunday at noon.

The weather in Pennsylvania has not been much better — if that is any consolation — and the Bonnies (2-4) have been able to play just twice since returning from South Carolina on March 21st.

Penn St. may be wearing last season's A-10 crown around the league, but they've suffered through a 3-17 spring thus far.

Men's tennis tops HC

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

The rain held out Wednesday until after the men's varsity tennis team beat Holy Cross 8-1. The weather symbolized feelings of the Holy Cross team - gloomy.

At first singles, Brian Gable pulled out another amazing win 6-0, 6-2. Chris Johnson, playing second singles, won a three set match against Chris Callohan, 6-4, 2-6, 7-6. Johnson won the tiebreaker 7-5.

Paul Audet, a freshman, the number three singles won his match with an impressive 6-1, 6-1 score. Audet, winning all two matches thus far this season, has become a definite asset.

At fourth singles, Rich Stone added another point 6-4, 6-2. Humberto Soto, like Johnson, played an impressive three setter. Soto lost 4-6 in the first set, but made an incredible comeback to cap a 6-1, 7-6 second and third set win. The tiebreaker score was 7-5. Sixth singles was won by Glen Peck, 6-4, 6-2. The number one doubles, Gable and Johnson, and second doubles players, Audet and Stone, both added wins to the Minutemen 6-1 lead. Gable and Johnson played a good doubles match winning 6-3, 6-4. Audet and Stone won their match easily 6-0, 6-1. The only loss was at third doubles where Soto and Peck played a tough match against Mike Bruder and John Collins. Soto and Peck lost the first set 3-6 but pumped themselves up to nab the second 6-3. In the third set, their opponents got a break and won 7-5.

Reinardo Flores (800m, mile), juniors Herb Heffner (800m) and Art Smith (mile, 3000m), senior Steve Tolly (1000m, 1500m), and freshman Derek Moore (1000m).

Dartmouth was the indoor Ivy League champion this past winter. "This will be an extremely difficult meet. The two Ivy League teams will run away from the rest," said O'Brien. Battling with UMass for the 3rd spot will be Maine and UNH. "I'm kind of looking to knock off New Hampshire," says O'Brien.

UMass lax teams psyched up for the weekend

• Family reunion for coach Garber vs. UNH • Gazelles looking for answers, repair kit

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is planning a little family get-together this weekend.

The Gorillas will attempt to travel to Durham, NH tomorrow for a match-up with the University of New Hampshire, and the 11th annual Garber reunion, which pits UMass mentor Dick Garber against his son Ted, the coach of the Wildcats.

Of course, as anyone who has ever tried to plan a picnic would attest, weather seems certain to cloud the festivities. Snow was predicted for the Granite State for tonight and tomorrow, creating the possibility of pushing the game to either Sunday or Monday.

Whenever it is played, it will feature the Gorillas (5-1), sky-high after coming off Wednesday's 15-6 toying of New England power Brown, against a New Hampshire bunch that has yet to dot the win column (0-3) and hasn't played in a week.

Despite the bloodlines, the elder Garber said he doesn't know much about his son's team, but assures it isn't a team that can ever be taken lightly.

"They have a whole new cast of faces. I know what they did early (losses to Delaware, Princeton and Cornell), and they were in every game midway through the third quarter," Garber said. "They're a well-drilled team, but I don't think they can match us player-to-player."

Statistically, sophomore attack Jeff Mechura leads with 10 points, followed by Mark Botnick with seven. The goalie will be either Stowe Milhous or Craig Benes.

UMass always provides a big game for the 'Cats, because it is UMass and because of the coaching rivalry.

"They're always fired up, it's a big game for them," Garber said. "If their players had a choice, this is the one game they'd want to win. I'd say they're comparable to St. John's, but if we play well we should win."

Gorilla Grumblings: Despite the Brown win, the Gorillas did get some bad news Wednesday when it was learned that senior co-captain and midfielder Chris Zusi may be out for the season.

What's that saying, "if it's not broke, don't fix it."

Well, University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Patti Bossio is faced with the opposite dilemna. Her team is broke and she has to figure out how to repair it.

"I'm going to move some people around," Bossio said. "Even try a new kind of defense. I'm really in the process of trying to develop something different, totally different, because what we're doing now isn't working."

It hasn't worked for the last four games anyway. After winning their opener, the Gazelles have lost their last four and have been blown out in the last two. After Tuesday's 12-5 loss to Boston College, UMass' record stands at 1-4, not exactly the start it wanted.

But the parts may be there. Bossio just has to figure out the instructions. Most of those parts however are brand new and they have not blended well with the old ones. Six of the Gazelles' starters are freshman.

"This team isn't even close to playing what they can play," Bossio said. "But its going to take a great effort by everyone in order to win."

Which brings Colgate University into the picture. The Red Raiders will invade Totman Field on Sunday (1 p.m. starting time). This is definitely a game that the Gazelles can win.

Colgate is 2-3 on the year and are slated to play Vermont tomorrow. In the meantime, UMass is not scheduled to play until Sunday. Not having played since Tuesday, the Gazelles will be a well rested team.

Losing this game could be disastrous.

"When you lose a lot in a row, you start to accept losing," Bossio said. "And then your in big trouble because then it becomes harder and harder to win. Winning doesn't just have to be in terms of the score at the end of the game. It can be just doing better than we're doing."

The defense will have to do better than its been doing to stop Colgate's Sheri Krasnoo. Krasnoo has terrorized opponents' defenses. The sophomore has

Rain keeps softball at bay again

A-10 opponents next

During spring break, when the University of Massachusetts softball squad inhaled 13 games in eight days, a few moments of rest and relaxation would have been nice.

But this is getting silly. Tuesday's twin date with the University of Rhode Island was scrubbed because of rain, followed by the cancellation of yesterday's scheduled doubleheader at Hartford.

In the two weeks since the Minutewomen (5-10) returned from sunburn country, coach Elaine Sortino's squad has upset Princeton and UConn. But that's it. Those games were staged last Sunday and have long since been tucked away in the memory banks.

"I'm getting weary of this," said Sortino, echoing the sentiments of spring season coaches throughout Boyden. "And I'm sure the kids are too. We've used the time to clean up some situations, but we need to play."

If whoever is responsible for the recent weather cooperates, the Minutewomen will retake Totman Field this weekend for four games — split between Atlantic 10 rivals

Minutemen washed out of Hartford

Head to Siena today

This week's rain has done more than dampen the spirits of the student body, it's also put a lot of sporting events on hold. The University of Massachusetts baseball team was no exception as its game against Hartford University yesterday was cancelled.

"It's been a disadvantage, to tell you the truth," said pitching coach Bob Rikeman. "Our pitching needed the work."

UMass had been looking forward to playing the Hawks, before the weather changed its plans.

"It would have been a good game," said Rikeman. "Its always a big rivalry."

The Minutemen instead spent the day indoors practicing for the Siena College game today. Since pitcher Jerry Creamer didn't get the chance to throw yesterday he will get the call today with Rich Graham, who was supposed to start against Siena, being put in the bullpen for this weekend's series against New York Tech.

According to Rikeman, Siena won't be a pushover for UMass.

"We played them last fall," said Rikeman, "and they're a tough team. They

Men's track at Dartmouth for first meet

At long last, the University of Massachusetts men's track team will have its first meet of the 1989 spring outdoor season tomorrow in Hanover, NH, and will face Dartmouth College, Cornell, the University of Maine, and the University of New Hampshire.

Although it has been a couple of months since the last meet of the indoor season, head coach Ken O'Brien believes his team will be ready. "I've been very impressed with the level of condition of the kids so far. I anticipate a much stronger team in the sprints and hurdles."

In the speed department, UMass has a great deal of youth, including sophomore Michael Grey (100m, 200m), sophomore Jerome Bledsoe (100m, long jump), Kevin Walters (400m), Steve Brown (100m), and senior Evon Walters (100m, 200m).

In the middle distance and distance events, UMass is led mostly by a veteran squad, consisting of senior

After about three weeks of continual running, weightlifting, and training, the University of Massachusetts women's outdoor track team will make its debut when it travels to Dartmouth University for a tri-meet with host Dartmouth and Cornell University. On the Big Green's new track, the Minutewomen are expected to do well in the middle-to-long distance events and on the field, the team's depth in the throwing events should also score often for UMass. Like the indoor season, most of the headlines will most likely be grabbed by freshmen Lee Ann Ambrose and Precious Hill, along with two other rookies, Amy St. Pierre and Cheryl LeClerc, and yes, even an upperclassmen, Shana Smith.

Crew teams going up the Conn. river

By CHARLES ABATI

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's crew teams will continue their seasons tomorrow with races on the Connecticut River. This weekend, both teams will take on Wesleyan but the men will race the University of New Hampshire as well.

The team is divided into two weight divisions, heavyweights and lightweights. Each boat has either four or eight rowers and all boats compete on race day, from the varsity A boat to the novice C boat. Each race is 2000 meters long.

The women are expected to do well tomorrow. In their fall season, they had only one loss — to the Coast Guard Academy. One of those victories included a win against the Wesleyan team.

The men's heavyweight eight is solid and experienced. All eight men have been on the team for three or four years.

The women's race will begin at 10:00 a.m. Boats will take off at 15 minute intervals. The men's race starts at 11:00 and will take place at the UMass boathouse, under the Calvin Coolidge Bridge in Hadley.

Partly cloudy today, high in the mid 40s. Sunny tomorrow, high 40 — 45.

Pro-choicers rally in nation's capital

By MARIA SACCHETTI

WASHINGTON — More than 600,000 abortion rights activists swarmed to the nation's capital yesterday for the largest march for women's rights in history.

Police deployed about 1,200 officers for the march, which began at noon at the Washington Monument and swelled to a size more than six times that of the original 100,000 estimate. There were no major confrontations between pro-choice activists and the handful of anti-abortionists protesting the rally, police said.

Pro-choice delegations from such far-reaching states as Alaska and Hawaii were among the multitudes that clogged the mile-long stretch from the monument to the final rallying point at the Capitol building.

Eleanor Smeal, former president of the National Organizaztion for Women, urged a cheering crowd to assert their reporoductive rights and fight for the passage of the equal rights amendment.

"We intend to keep on building and building," Smeal said. "We intend to keep moving forward and never go back."

Deleagations from 500 colleges and universities were present, and 500 students from the University of Massachusetts were joined by 400 delegates from Smith College and 300 from Mount Holyoke.

Marci Lew, a UMass junior and co-founder of People for Choice, said she and 15 other UMass students will remain here today to lobby Congress for women's rights. "What women do should not be decided by the government," she said. "It's a choice that only should be made by the women themselves."

Prize-winning writers discuss the business

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

The non-fiction writer's sole obligation is to the truth, best-selling author Joe McGinnis told a packed Memorial Hall audience at a conference last week featuring six Pulitzer Prize-winning writers.

McGinnis, author of Fatal Vision and Blind Faith, was the subject of a recent two-part New Yorker series by Janet Malcolm, who held up McGinnis as an example of the journalist as "confidence man, preying on people's vanity, ignorance, or loneliness, gaining their trust and betraying them without remorse."

McGinnis was sued by the subject of Fatal Vision, convicted murderer Jeffrey MacDonald, who said McGinnis had deceived him by pretending to be a friend, while writing the book that portrayed MacDonald as guilty of the murders.

The third and last panel of the two-day conference, "The Art of Non-fiction," was dominated by the controversy sparked by the New Yorker series. About 300 people crowded into the room to hear McGinnis defend himself.

"The obligation of the writer is to his own or her own perception of the truth, and to the reader," McGinnis said. "If you write true stories about living people, some of them aren't going to like what you have to say."

McGinnis, who lived with MacDonald during the murder trial, said the relationship between a writer and a subject "is a professional relationship, in which both sides enter with their eyes open, each hoping to gain something."

McGinnis spent years talking and corresponding with MacDonald, which led MacDonald to think McGinnis believed his story about drug-crazed hippies stabbing his wife and two small daughters.

"You're trying to get them to reveal themselves," McGinnis said. "That's what you're there to do."

During the trial, McGinnis started to doubt MacDonald's innocence, but never told MacDonald of his change of heart, for fear that MacDonald would try to stop the publication of Fatal Vision.

"What I had then was an obligation to keep him from preventing me from writing the book," McGinnis said. "This is a man who is the opposite of naive, and was the personification of a manipulator."

Tracy Kidder, author of House and The Soul of a New Machine and a panelist, also defended the journalist's methods.

"I don't think what I do is morally indefensible," Kidder said. "I try to defend it all the time."

Kidder, who recently finished a book about a Holyoke school teacher, said journalists must allow subjects to think they are friendly.

"There are times when a journalist is interviewing a subject, when you lead that subject," Kidder said. "The real question comes when you sit down at the typewriter and that coldness comes over you."

MacDonald's suit against McGinnis ended in a hung jury, and was settled before another trial. If MacDonald had won, McGinnis said, the case would have set a dangerous legal precedent for writers.

"You're going to have to read a Miranda warning to your subjects," McGinnis said.

The conference also featured panels on "Journalism Into History" and "The Subject and the Subject: Biography and Memoir."

In the first panel, on the journalist as historian, the writers agreed that journalists are qualified to write books of history, just as much as academic historians.

Brown's attorney, Richard Carey told the Union-News, "There's abundant evidence here of bad judgement and there's no doubt he's guilty of trespass, and there's some evidence he may be guilty of larceny of less than $250," he said.

Dorm rooms to have cable television installed

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Correspondent

By the fall of 1990, the University of Massachusetts intends to have cable television installed in every residence hall room, the Board of Governors announced at its Thursday night meeting.

BOG chairperson Eric Nakajima said he believes Housing Services is "looking to make loads of money off the students."

"A satellite dish will be installed in Southwest, and housing will have control of the cable service," he said.

Nakajima said the installation of cable raises several questions, including the possibility of a student-run cable station, and whether all revenues will go back to Housing Services.

Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services, said cable "should be installed in 1990," but that the primary site of the satellite dish was west of the UMass Transit Bus Garage, not Southwest.

In other business:

Food Services Coordinator Barri Jaffe and Finances Coordinator Kirk Merrow are conducting a student survey to determine demand for new foods, Jaffe said.

"Students have expressed an interest in cotton candy, caramel apples, gourmet jelly beans and fried dough," she said.

At-large representative John Harutunian said the BOG must hold elections again for Greek and Central area representatives, because of a shortage of ballots in the Franklin Dining Commons and the Newman Center in last month's election.

The election is scheduled for tomorrow at the two sites from 4 to 7 p.m., and in Butterfield Residence Hall from 6 to 7 p.m.

High turnout for weekend charity race

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Twenty-one years ago, when Father Bruce Ritter gave shelter to six homeless children in Manhattan, an annual 10-kilometer run was probably the last thing on his mind.

Ritter's work since that time was the first thing on the minds of more than 300 people who ran or walked Saturday in the 10th annual Run for Ritter.

Jennifer Parent, co-chairperson of the run, said the turnout was "wonderful. It's more than we usually have."

Neil Faugrlo was the top male finisher with a time of 33:41, while Kiernan Boyle (34:25) was second and Mark Rendall took third (35:00), according to Chris Mascarenhas, a race volunteer.

Sidney Chastain led the females with a time of 39:54, while Veta Wier (41:06) was second and Sandra Story (41:11) finished third, according to Mascarenhas.

Parent said funds raised by the race will be donated to the Covenant House shelters started by the Catholic minister in 1972. Organizers will not know the exact number of participants or how much money was raised until April 21, when the sponsor sheets are due, she said. At least $1,500 was raised from the $5 registration fee required of each participant, she said.

Parent said about 30 volunteers were along the 6.2-mile route "directing traffic, directing runners, giving runners water, yelling out times to runners and a lot of people just out there to encourage the runners." The race started and finished at Alumni Stadium Track. No injuries were reported, she said.

Karen Klemm, who co-chaired the race with Parent and Nicole Belhumeur, said the Student Government Association donated $1,000 while the Graduate Student Senate donated $250.

Covenant House opened its first crisis center in Times Square in 1972. Since then, Ritter has opened centers in Toronto, Houston, Ft. Lauderdale and New Orleans, according to Elizabeth Pollard, publicity director for the run. Pollard said the funds will be used for the daily operation of the centers.

Gay rights proponents seek protective legislation

By ALEXANDRA RAYNOLDS
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Gay Civil Rights Bill should be passed so that gay men, lesbians and bisexuals will have equal rights and protection under the law, rights they do not presently have, a gay rights activist said Saturday.

Mike Izdepski, coordinator of Alliance for Equality, said the bill would also prevent legal discrimination based on sexual preference in matters relating to housing, employment, and numerous other areas.

"In concrete terms, the bill would simply add the words 'sexual orientation' to existing civil rights statutes," he said.

The forum on the bill was one of a number of events this weekend that celebrated the sixth annual University of Massachusetts Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Awareness Week. The week, which began with a rally Friday on the Student Union steps, is scheduled to continue through this week.

Amid posters and purple balloons, some 200 students participated in Friday's rally, titled "20 years since Stonewall," referring to the gay bar in New York City that was repeatedly raided by police. Subsequent protests by the gay community led to some of the first media coverage of gay, lesbian and bisexual concerns.

Izdepski said the bill has been filed and voted on by the Massachusetts House and Senate each year since 1973. The closest the bill has come to passage, he said, was in 1987, when it was defeated by the Senate Committee on Bills.

The committee is one of 11 steps the bill must go through to be passed into law, he said, adding that the bill is "halfway through the process. It has been approved by the House and is currently being debated by the Senate Ways and Means Committee."

Massachusetts would only be the second state to pass a gay civil rights bill, Izdepski said. Wisconsin has such a law, and Ohio has a gay civil rights bill in its legislature, he added.

Valley food production may be in jeopardy, panel says

By ALETHEA O'DONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

Food production in the Pioneer Valley is in danger of becoming a lost resource and valley residents must take action in order to preserve the area's farmland, said a panel of food production experts Saturday.

"New England's landscape is a working landscape, and without an economic and social atmosphere that supports agriculture, it is difficult to sustain," said Robert Wagner, director of the northeastern office of the American Farmland Trust.

The people of the state "haven't been able to support the economic incentive to stay on farms," Wagner told a group of about 30 listeners at the Nacul Architecture Center in Amherst.

Wagner emphasized that attention must be focused on farmland as a productive resource.

"What we are looking for is land protected from development, as a sustainable resource," he said. "Land used for agricultural purposes won't be sustained without the support of farmers and the economy."

Wagner used Hartford County, Conn., a community where agriculture has been replaced by urbanization, as an example of what can happen when a community loses touch with its agricultural roots and warned of the Pioneer Valley suffering the same fate.

"Agriculture is on its last legs in Hartford county. In the 1978 census there were 80,000 acres of farmland, in the 1987 census, there were only 60,000 acres left. Those 20,000 acres have been replaced by asphalt and housing construction," Wagner said.

The US 1987 Census of Agriculture for Massachusetts reported that while irrigated land increased in Massachusetts by 16 percent between the years of 1982 and 1987, the amount of harvested cropland declined 1987.

"The Pioneer Valley has open space," Wagner said, "but a lot of it is used for recreation. It is tougher and tougher (for farmers) to compete, and this could be helped by asking 'Where do we focus our attention?' If we focus our attention on development, we have forgotten the importance of agriculture."

Clifford Kurz, a bio-dynamic farmer and owner of the Kuest Farm in Hatfield, said self-sufficiency in terms of food production in the Pioneer Valley is a potential possibility.

"Self-sufficiency means that we'd still have food if the outside sources were cut off," he said.

But he agreed obstacles lie in the way of building local agriculture.

"In the political-social-economic sphere, building and construction pressure is tremendous. The Valley is good farmland, and we have to decide that we don't want farmland built on," he said.

Susan George, a Senior Fellow of the Transnational Institute in Amsterdam, said food production is a three-part chain made up of banks, producers, and consumers.

"In the last 40 years, the whole thrust has been towards greater concentration and control over the farmer. The actual producing of food itself is a tiny portion of the food system," she said.

George said banks often dictate to the farmer what crops he or she can grow, and because farmers are under contract by large processors, the farmer is being "squeezed."

The fate of the farmers' futures lies at the town meeting level, Wagner said, and citizens need to take an interest. "Take a look around you and see what's in the zoning ordinances," Wagner said. "Also, buy local product."

"You can't overnight apply these (new) ideas," Kurz said. "Any idea incarnates slowly, so take steps and plot out the path."

Study shows New England paying for S&L bailout

WASHINGTON (AP) – Nearly $2 billion in New England federal tax dollars was earmarked last year to help troubled savings and loans in Texas and other parts of the country, says a congressional study critical of the government bailouts.

The Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, a bipartisan alliance of lawmakers from 18 states, complained that New Englanders are being forced to pay for the "irresponsible gambling" of the Sun Belt during the oil-triggered economic boom of the 1970's and early 1980's.

The study compared each state's tax burden with the $38 billion the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. earmarked last year to help close, merge and stabilize troubled institutions.

The report estimates that while the 18 states of the Northeast and Midwest will shoulder nearly half of the money FSLIC planned to spend, the region was responsible for less than 10 percent of trouble.

In contrast, 89 of the 223 savings and loans aided by the government last year were in Texas. That will cost the government $24.8 billion, but federal tax dollars from Texans will cover only $1.8 billion.

No New England savings and loans were aided by FSLIC in 1988, but the region nevertheless had to shoulder 6.5 percent of the cost.

The report said $799.7 million in federal tax dollars from Massachusetts taxpayers will go to cover part of the FSLIC bailouts. Connecticut will account for $527.3 million; New Hampshire $130.4 million; Rhode Island $110.4 million; Maine $105.1 million; and Vermont $51.5 million, the study said.

The figures on federal taxes devoted to S&L bailouts were based on the assumption that the taxpayer will pay 70 percent of the $38 billion, an estimate provided by the Congressional Budget Office.

"While there is no doubt that a large share of the blame for this disaster lies at the federal doorstep...there is no reason that states which have unreasonably contributed to the problem should not be called upon to make additional sacrifice," the report said.

"Such a sacrifice should be required from states which have made an unreasonable contribution to the problem through poor regulation and have the ability to pay," it added.

Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., co-chairman of Northeast-Midwest congressional Coalition, called for a more balanced sharing of the burden of cleaning up the industry.

"The savings and loan crisis is a direct consequence of fraud and mismanagement, together with a loose regulatory environment, in a few states," Wolpe said.

The coalition blames the industry crisis in Texas and other Sun Belt states on the "anything goes" attitude of 1973 to 1986, when oil prices spiraled upward, creating an economic boom in the region.

That led to "a very relaxed approach to commercial lending by Texas' S&L industry," the study said. "A large segment of the state's thrift industry strayed from traditional home mortgage lending and financed a speculative boom in the construction of office buildings and shopping centers. These speculative ventures were counting on the economic activity generated by ever-increasing world oil prices."

ASIAN NIGHT – Hawaiian exchange students perform traditional hula dances at the sixth annual Asian night at the Campus Center Auditorium Friday. The events, sponsored by the Asian-American Students Association to celebrate different Asian cultures, featured Tae Kwon Do and Karate, an Indian violinist, traditional Cambodian music, and a fashion show of contemporary clothing.

Sorority alumni observe anniversary

About 30 Sigma Kappa alumni returned to the University of Massachusetts this weekend for the sorority's 45th anniversary.

"Some of the women have kept in touch with each other over the years," Becky Gittins, a reunion coordinator, said. "But for many, this was the first time they have seen each other since they graduated."

Prior to 1944, Sigma Kappa was known as the colony Beta Delta. The local chapter was formed with the intention of becoming a national sorority. It was on April 15, 1944 that the first pledge class was initiated officially as Sigma Kappas.

In 1944, the sorority had 30 members and a pledge class of 12. Forty-five years later, the sorority has 45 active members and 18 pledges.

"I think the enthusiasm within the house this weekend is fantastic," said Melissa Holt, Sigma Kappa president. "Although the people in the house may have changed, the love, friendship and caring hasn't."

Taylor Branch, author of Parting the Waters: America in the King Years, 1954-63 won the Pulitzer Prize for history this year.

"Throughout the great crises of American history, you'll find discomfort or passionate beliefs about the race issue," Branch said.

Without common cultural bonds between races in America, "you get enormous potential for mischief in history," he said.

Branch recounted the way in which Reconstruction had been distorted in history, from The Birth of a Nation to Gone With the Wind.

"The tools of a journalist, whatever you call yourself, are more urgently needed in this field than most," Branch said. "It's important to record the history while the people who can give you access to the history are still alive," he said. "Race history, more than most history, is not only important, but it's perishable."

J. Anthony Lukas, a two-time Pulitzer-winner, found his love of history fulfilled while writing Common Ground.

The book traces Boston's school busing crisis of the early 1970s through the stories of three families who were Irish, Yankee, and Black.

"Each of these three families was trailing this huge burden of history, which propelled them toward collision in the streets of Boston," Lukas said.

History books written by journalists are more accessible to the average reader than most academic histories, the panelists said.

"There's not a footnote in Common Ground. This was a calculated insult to academia," Lukas joked, then added more seriously, "we wanted to present this book as a yarn, as a story, and we wanted to strip it of all academic paraphernalia."

The panel on biography and memoir featured a discussion about the blurred lines of fiction and non-fiction, and about turning real people into literary characters.

Biography "has replaced the old-fashioned novel as a place to escape to," said Gail Caldwell, book critic for the Boston Globe.

The panel also discussed the recent trend in biographies to focus on the sordid side of a subject's life, like the Albert Goldman biography of John Lennon, and the Arianna Huffington book about Picasso.

Joyce Carol Oates labeled these books "pathography" in a review of Jean Stafford: A Biography by David Roberts.

Roberts, who was a panelist, said he was sorry his work was linked with more sensationalist books.

"I think my book is, first and last, a celebration of Jean Stafford," Roberts said. When a biographer finds a subject's personal weaknesses, the writer should "face it head-on, as I did, and don't blink at it," he said.

Pulitzer Prize-winning biographer Justin Kaplan said the "pathographies" were popular because "biography may be the highest form of gossip.

"We all simply love dirt," Kaplan said. "We thrive on it, possibly more in this era than in any other because of a sort of 'Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous' mentality."

UMass English Professor John Wideman, a novelist and author of the book Brothers and Keepers, said he set out to write about his younger brother, who was convicted of murder in Pennsylvania.

"Very quickly it became apparent to me that I was writing about myself," Wideman said.

Novelist Anne Bernays said she spent two years working on a memoir, but eventually abandoned the project because she was more comfortable writing fiction.

"It isn't until you sit down to write that you realize the people in your life are your material," Bernays said.

other pro-choice organizations, was triggered by an upcoming US Supreme Court decision this month on a Missouri anti-abortion case. The court's ruling could possibly overturn Rowe vs. Wade, the 1973 decision to legalize abortion, NOW officials said.

Activist Gloria Steinem warned President Bush, a self professed anti-abortionist, and the Supreme Court, that women "will never go back" to illegal abortion. "It's the Supreme Court that's on trial here, not reproductive rights," she said.

Former presidential candidate Rev. Jesse Jackson also spoke at the rally, sharing the podium with such celebrities as Cybil Sheppard, Susan Sarandon, and Morgan Fairchild.

George A. Hardin were stopped by police for traveling without illuminated headlights and in the wrong direction of a one-way street. Police found burglary tools in the car and what was later found to be stolen property.

Brown and Chase were suspended from the basketball team after the incident by coach John Calipari (Hardin was allowed on the team and played in the final seven games of the season). Neither Brown nor Chase could not be reached yesterday for comment.

Charges are pending against Hardin, a recruit to the UMass basketball team. Hardin, who is still a student at UMass, declined comment.

Calipari testified that Chase told him Hardin was not involved in the theft. Calipari could not be reached for comment yesterday.

Support for the bill is substantial, he said, citing a 1987 survey by State Rep. Mark Roosevelt that stated two of every three Massachusetts voters favor the bill, and a majority of representatives in the House and Senate favor passage of the bill.

Supporters face major opposition, especially from religious organizations, Izdepski said. "Misinformation about the bill is being spread about by the opposition. It is not about morality. [The opposition] is going for the gutter, painting gay people as abnormal and perverted," he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

An ambiguous freedom

"I believe we live in a sick and dying empire that is desperately clutching at its symbols and attempting to enforce patriotic allegiance and obedience from the people and suppress anti-patriotic opposition." This was a statement made by Gregory Johnson of New York City.

Bob Bobala

A member of the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade, Mr. Johnson was arrested in Dallas during the 1984 Republican National Convention for violating a state law that forbids the offensive "desecration of a venerated object." He is accused of pouring lighter fluid on and igniting an American flag while demonstrators chanted 'America, the red, white and blue, we spit on you." Last month, the Supreme Court began studying his case, which will ultimately decide what forms of political protests are protected by the Constitution.

In a similar incident, a Chicago art student recently gained national attention for part of an exhibit called "What is the Proper Way to Display a US Flag?" He simply spread an American flag across the floor, giving spectators the opportunity to step on it or around it. Like Mr. Johnson, he too considers the United States to be a most oppressive nation and he claims to be a communist.

It's tough being an American. For 200 hundred years the Constitution has guaranteed us the freedom of speech and expression. As Americans, we have the right to say what we want and do what we want, provided it's within the limits of the law.

We live in a diverse society, composed of different cultural backgrounds and political beliefs. We want to respect that diversity and we take pride in the "melting pot" we live in (Of course, I'm speaking in the ideal here. I realize that diversity isn't something that everyone welcomes). But the problem many of us have is that, living in the same society, we have an obligation to be considerate and civil to one another.

Now, this guy who set the flag on fire in Dallas, and the art student in Chicago, they're both Americans. They're expressing themselves. They're exercising their rights as citizens. It would make sense to side with civil libertarians and artists who feel these men have every right to desecrate the flag. A Supreme Court decision in favor of the Texas law forbidding the "desecration of a venerated object" could possibly lead the way to the suppression of those who hold unconforming political beliefs.

However, think back about 10 years to the visions of burning American flags when the hostages were taken in Iran. I'll be the first to admit I'm not that patriotic, but I remember the anger I felt inside of me. How does a veteran, who may have lost an arm or a leg fighting for this country, feel when he sees people walking on an American flag or burning it — and right in the United States itself? How does a widow, or the children of a veteran who died while serving his country feel?

The flag may only be a symbol, but if you trash the symbol, you trash the people who believe in it. Hurting others isn't a constitutional right.

Column misrepresents seventies

I am writing to declare my contempt of Nancy Cohen's pseudo-article ("Say no to seventies styles," April 4). It is not the least bit surprising to find this Nancy Reagan mentality in her writing. She is wrong to equate loose, ornate clothing with unsavory dating practices. Cohen herself admits she would "love to have men with hairy chests, lots of gold necklaces, and shirts unbuttoned down to their navel come up. . .and ask 'Hey babe, what's your sign?'." How weak Cohen is to attack the wonderful dancing of Saturday Night Fever. This is obviously the ranting of one who has never bumped or locomoted to a sultry disco beat.

Would she rather the seventies never happened? Is her soul so contorted by pop psychology that she would not go back to that wonder-decade? I suppose she has no respect for Captain and Teneille, Abba, Elton John, KC and the Sunshine Band, Earth, Wind, and Fire, the Osmonds, or the King himself. You can take your beefy guys and skinny girls in their too-tight clothes, but give me my Hawaii Five-O, Good Times, and a Suzi Quatro record any day. And what if someone does find him or herself humming to Andy Gibb? It would be one example of personal enjoyment in spite of another senseless, narrow-minded ukase from the likes of Cohen.

A couple of weeks ago, I was involved in an auto accident on the University of Massachusetts campus. Luckily, no one was hurt but there was damage to both cars. Thanks to Officer Robert Thrasher and his fellow officers, this nasty situation was made more bearable. They were efficient, courteous and thoroughly professional. They took care of the technicalities quickly and at the same time realized it was a tough spot for those involved.

I found the same level of competence at the records office. The folks there explained the procedures clearly and took time out of their work to dig up some information I needed for my reports.

This was the first time I had to call on the services of the UMass police department. Although they are not always thanked for their work, UMass is lucky to have a police force of this caliber.

Security thwarts terrorism

Pan American Airlines flight 103 was destroyed in flight with 258 passengers and crew members aboard. That was in December, 1988. On April 3, 1989, the families and friends of those killed in this incident held a candlelight vigil in memory of the victims. They are also calling for an investigation of security measures at airports and trying to determine why the public wasn't adequately warned of the bomb threat.

There are many things which the general public does not realize about terrorism and bomb threats. First, terrorist groups depend on creating a sense of fear in the general public. They rely on the news media to report on their actions, thus giving them publicity. Unfortuantely, Pan Am 103 became a propaganda piece for the terrorist group which planted the bomb. They succeeded in broadcasting their message to the world and caused people to fear flying on American airlines because of the possibility of a bomb on the plane.

Second, as the US State Department said after the bombing, American embassies around the globe receive many such threats each year. It is virtually impossible to validate each and every threat that is phoned to an American embassy. If the State Department issued a warning every time a threat was received, American air travel would be paralyzed to such a degree that it would seem as if American airlines didn't exist. The same also goes for foreign air carriers. Paralyzing air travel through issuing a warning every time a bomb threat is received would again give the terrorists the publicity they are seeking and help them create fear in all of us.

I'm not saying that it is correct in not warning the public of a bomb threat against a particular airline at a particular time frame. Instead, airlines and the federal government should improve the quality and capability of security measures, both at home and abroad. Isreal has improved the security measures of its airline, El Al, by opening and inspecting every piece of luggage going onto a plane. The cargo compartments of each aircraft have armor plating as insurance against any possible bomb that was overlooked in the initial inspection. These cargo compartments are depressurized before the plane leaves the terminal to test for any bombs which are triggered by a change in the barometric pressure as the plane ascends or descends. There are also armed men aboard each flight disguised as regular passengers. Their job is to "neutralize" any armed terrorist who gets on the plane.

These security measures are time consuming. El Al officials suggest passengers flying on the airline arrive at the terminal four hours ahead of time. They have proven highly effective, however. Since they were instituted in the late 1960's, not a single El Al aircraft has been hijacked or bombed.

Terrorists are not concerned with their lives; they are willing to die, they are even prepared to die for their cause. We must accept this and realize the need for increased security measures. We must be prepared to stand against terrorist groups and acts of terrorism. Because death is inconsequential to terrorists; and the imprisonment of terrorists gives their comrades a reason to take hostages (to bargain for their comrades' release), we need counterterrorist units to rescue hostages and kill terrorists on a hijacked aircraft or ship, or inside a building.

We cannot afford to give into terrorists by doing what they want us to do. We can only increase our vigilance, security measures, and intelligence against terrorists and be willing to punish terrorists whenever it is necessary. Pan Am 103 should serve as a reminder of what can happen when we fall behind in the fight against terrorism.

Hunger: a problem around the globe and next door

As a youth, I befriended an elderly woman who lived on the second floor of a three tenement house next to mine. She was the neighborhood grandmother, and all the children on the street looked forward to the time that was spent with her after school. She'd sit on a rocking chair tending to an assortment of flowers, all the while quizzing the children on events that made up the school day.

I became one of her favorites. She had a terrible accident as a child which inhibited her present mobility, but self-pride blinded this woman to the realities of her physical limitations. It was raining the day I offered to take out her garbage. It was only when it rained that she would allow me to help her. As I took her garbage around back, the heavy rain caused the bag to tear. My heart fell when I realized what fell from her garbage. They were empty dog food cans. She didn't own a dog. I never forgot what I saw and I never told anyone until now.

The problem of hunger and starvation has reached epidemic proportions. If nothing is done, the situation will get worse. We all know what it means to be hungry, but what does it mean to be starving? The difference is nightmarishly simple. Go to be hungry, you wake up hungrier. Go to bed starving, you might not wake up at all. Consider these facts I got from the Hunger Action Manual:

Between 13 and 20 million people die each year as a result of hunger and starvation. That's 40,000 deaths a day and more than 25 each minute. Three out of four are children.

More people have died of hunger in the past five years than have been killed in all the wars in the last 150 years.

More than 500 million people suffer from chronic malnutrition. Some estimates are as high as one billion. That's 10-20 percent of the worlds population, or more than double that of the US.

With the exception of a nuclear holocaust, there is no other type of disaster that even approaches hunger as a threat to human life.

To argue that problems of hunger and starvation are caused by too many people and not enough food is simplistic and misleading. Consider these facts:

The world currently produces two pounds of grain each day for every person on Earth. That's enough to provide everyone with 3000 calories a day. This doesn't even include many other nutritious foods such as fruits, vegetables, and beans.

The United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization estimates that only 60 percent of the world's cultivable land is actually farmed. In Africa and South America, only about 25 percent of the arable land is under cultivation.

Hunger and starvation know no boundaries. Consider these facts:

A 1985 report by the Harvard University-based Physician Task Force on Hunger in America estimated that as many as 20 million Americans suffer from not having enough to eat.

Requests for emergency food assistance have more than doubled in many cities during the last few years. In 1983, the US Conference of Mayors described hunger as "the most prevalent and most insidious problem" facing them.

The US government has a stockpile of more than two billion pounds of surplus food. It is estimated that Americans waste more than 200 billion pounds of food every year — approximately 20 percent of our total production.

On April 15, students will have the opportunity to volunteer in a "Hunger Cleanup" to do their part to fight hunger and starvation. The Hunger Cleanup will be a three hour program that will raise money for the hungry and homeless through student collected pledges from local work projects. If we can prevent one death by starvation, or one child from going to bed hungry, then the Hunger Cleanup will have been a success. For me, this day will help soothe a memory of empty dog food cans.

Some tricks they'll never learn.

If animals were responsible for their own birth control, there might not be a need to kill 14.5 million unwanted dogs and cats each year. That's the cost of not having your pet spayed or neutered. Fixed.

Even bringing a litter of puppies or kittens to an animal shelter is no guarantee they'll find a home before room has to be made for more.

Having your pet spayed or neutered is the only way to reduce the sad number of ownerless dogs and cats destroyed this year. And it will also increase your pet's chances of living longer and healthier life. That responsibility is yours alone.

Yesthead ferments the truth about W. Greg Rothman

By JASON TALERMAN
Collegian Staff

If you cut off the head the body dies. W. Greg Rothman. The interview was in two parts. The first was question and answer. Three questions each the only stipulation being that we had to answer our own as well as those posed to us. The second was an open forum Saturday afternoon with Greg, Brian Darling, and Steven Lutz, courtesy of the Carling Black Label corporation, at apartment -5, the republican bunker, above Kinko's Copies. Surely Greg has consulted God on what The Minuteman deems is appropriate to be written about me. I, a non believer, have consulted a far less benign, albiet far more entertaining, source: modern thought.

It's tough to peg these guys. The headless pack is a lot easier to know. According to Lutz they are necessarily admired by "morons" but the core is a very bright group that is equipped with the tools to drive you to madness. A night of fillibustering in senate with these guys is like going down to the clinic for thirteen shots in the stomach because the rabid squirrels in your attic got loose and you woke up with dried foam in the corners of your mouth and your legs swollen ten fold. In 1969 General MacFarlane called just such modus operandi "attrition".

At any rate, here is the thang, in abbreviated form. Greg led off with, "What does Yeasthead mean?" I threw the usual disclaimers at him and then fired it up with my treatise on violence. It's no secret that my daily published thoughts live and die on the shoulders of violence. Influence and change in this and all societies comes in one form, violence. I don't condone it, I'm just turning its sick side. Greg confused me with legality when it came time to answer his own query. I paid no heed. "The jury is in," said he but listening to the jury is like loving thy neighbor and we all know what a good lot of b.s. that is.

Pessimism might be a dirty word with college age free thinkers but even with this 40 lb. pack of hate I carry around on my back I still manage to get a lot done. SGA politicos live and die on extremism, in either direction. I don't go for idealism, either right or left. It takes a genuine bigger than life role model to pull off idealism. Without that huge voice the results are substanceless, strewn with a lack of compromise and endless bickering. We definitely have no one of the magnitude to pull it off here, no matter how fat the cats claim to be.

Which all leads to to my first question for Greg, "You are hunting with seasoned sportsmen. You bring down an eight point buck. While dressing it you slice open the abdominal sack thus poisoning the meat. The other hunters are standing over you, shaking their heads. What do you do?"

It became clear that I would get nothing surprising out of him. He mentioned something about an NRA membership retroactive to the womb and some other unfunny crap and then I cut him off with my finest right wing rhetorical satire. I told him that the best avenue would be to shoot the other hunters, obviously an unsympathetic bunch, cover the whole mess with leaves and flee because, afterall, only real fatty, hormone injected, meat befits a man.

Predictably Greg followed up with, "Who's better at sports, liberals or conservatives?" The answer seems pretty obvious to me. Seeing major sport in this country is all but dominated by Blacks, it would be hard to imagine the concensus leaning toward the republican side of the stream. "Besides," I said, turning the focus to hoop, "Liberals are more fluid going to the hole." At that point Greg got woozy due to the hot flashes he's been troubled with and expanded the question to the sexual arena. he ranted and raved for the the conservative camp; went on blabbering about some moraless binary point system. I staved him off at that point, having it on good authority that he does not make such a spectacular sexual role model for the right. Which would explain why I caught him later on, outside the SGA meeting practicing the Dallas Cowboys' famed Flex II defense with a new Minuteman recruit. I guess all that Freudian male on male retentive physical humor has its place when you respect women as little as Brian Darling told me he did. Maybe he didn't mean to say that but he had been drinking for four days and the words just welled up in him, like fine bile. I dunno, maybe it was me, I was drunk too.

At any rate, The Bone Cow Nation will get what it's got coming.

"It's Miller time" as Den's dry wit hits FAC

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Correspondent

Dennis Miller
FAC Concert Hall
April 7

It was a side-splitting night of laughter at the Fine Arts Center on Friday, April 7 when Dennis Miller came for a visit. The house was pretty packed, and as Miller walked onto the stage, the crowd greeted him with extreme enthousiasm. "Thankyou for whipping yourselves into a frenzy," he responded.

Dennis Miller has caught the public eye with his regular appearances as Saturday Night Live's news commentator. His style is similar to that of many comedians, the content of his material revolving around the familiar topics of sex, politics, media and religion. With such a style it is easy for a comedian to become cliched, stale and boring. However thanks to Miller's originality and intelligence there was never a dull moment in his act.

An especially intelectually stimulating and sensitive part of his performance was when he spoke about "right to lifers" and fundamentalist Christians. Commeniting on how some "right to lifers" bomb abortion clinics to make their point, Miller remarked, "Now there's a cogent Christian attitude for you."

The subject matter moved on to Jim Bakker and the fundamentalists. Miller seriously berated Bakker for taking advantage of people's faith in God. But of course he mixed this with humor by saying Tammy Bakker, "looks like the joker from Batman." To finish up the religious material, Miller portrayed the pope taking revenge on the person who shot him. To say trhis was extremely funny is understatement.

Overall, he covered a broad spectrum of subjects. Speaking abou the Oscars, Miller declared, "If I appear a little out of it, it's because I'm still trying to recover from that Rob Lowe thing."

He told the audience that the Ayatollah has put a bounty on the writer of the Cliff notes for The Satanic Verses. He likened Marilyn Quale's hair to the Oceanspray logo. And he shared with the crowd the fact that he loves Family Feud - "I especially enjoy when all the family mutants who couldn't make the team come up on the stage."

The audience loved every minute of Miller's performance and gave him a standing ovation when he left the stage. He came back for two encores, something comedians rarely do. His first encore dealt with sex and relationships. He warned the audience that, "you can now get AIDS from hoping you don't get it." In the second encore, he summed up his act by sharing with the crowd, some of his "on the road" stories, and poking fun at Hare Krishnas in airports. With funny bones aptly satisfied, Miller bid the audience a good night.

The opening act, a man definitely worth mentioning, was Paul Ringman. He's a regular at such comedy hot spots as the Improv and Dangerfields. This performance marked Ringman's second appearance with Miller. With his guitar, Ringman did hilarious impressions of the Bee Gees, Elvis and a Jamaican version of the song "Runaway."

Ringman informed the audience that "this is sort of a homecoming for me." I used to be at UMass when happy hour was legal at the Bluewall." Ending off his act he played for us a song called "Back Seat of my Car," telling the tale of a high school kid having his first sexual experience in the back seat of his car. The crowd was roaring with laughter. All in all, it was a very funny night.

Historic will rebuild from ashes

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a $100,000, three-alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"It's a disappointment," he said. "The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. But we'll come out of it. The club will survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the club during the fire which started near the club's function room yesterday, leaving only a section of the shop and a locker room standing, John J. Sheehy said.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your long-range ambitions receive surprising support from an unexpected source. Not the best time for signing contracts or asking for a raise. Try to settle any disputes early in the day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Having more security will please you. You enter a competition with a unique advantage. Experience counts in the workplace. A relationship turns the corner after a candid conversation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Examine a financial situation involving several people. You could end up on a disappointing note where a friend is concerned. Today's events give you a new sense of stability.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your hopes for a relationship will materialize sooner than you expected. The romantic side of love is emphasized. Business travel gives you extra cash. Be open to forging new alliances.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) What you did yesterday has set the stage for a more settled situation today. A new environment will give both a relationship and your bank account a boost. Innovative ideas win you notice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your financial responsibilities increase. You may be feeling frustrated in your efforts to put a relationship together. Short trips produce fine results. Be more understanding of a child. Patience unlocks doors.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Your employer may make heavier demands on your time. Try to settle a problem with a neighbor or co-worker. Be on time or early for an appointment. Your ambition grows. Make long-range plans.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Go that extra step in a relationship and you will open the door to lasting happiness. Outdoor activities make this a better week. Money will become available for a pet project. Stay energized.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You get to have more fun at work this week. Although you still feel restricted in some areas of your life, the end result will be highly satisfying. Time works in your favor.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Communications improve, and so does your cash flow. Independent action brings fantastic results. Be bold; conditions favor expansion of your business activities. A health matter deserves prompt attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your responsibilities could leave you more tired than usual, but a larger paycheck will energize you. Your serious-mindedness works to your advantage. Prominent people are impressed. Entertain at home this evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Some bills come due. Manage your own money and you will not be caught short again. Socializing will improve your chances for achieving career success or retirement happiness. Choose like-minded companions.

"I don't think we got beat as much in the zone," Hartman said. "I didn't think they really could have done too much if they didn't get the free positions."

UMass fell behind 7-4 in the first half, a position they are starting to get used to, as the the Gazelles got used to the new zone. But the mainly freshman defense settled down in the second half on Springfield's artificial turf field.

The game was originally scheduled to be played at Totman Field but at the last minute with overcast skies threatening Amherst, the game was switched to the neutral site.

Lax facts: It was the fifth out of six games that UMass has played on the carpet. The only game on natural grass was played at Totman in the Gazelles' home opener last week. UMass returns to Totman this Wednesday to play Harvard University.

for the future. They've shown a lot of potential in their last two races, having also beaten Amherst this season.

The team's weekend success began to go downhill from there, however. The varsity lightweight boat placed second in its race. The New Hampshire boat pulled out a victory while Wesleyan brought up the rear. The varsity heavyweight race was pretty much between Wesleyan and New Hampshire. Wesleyan won by a length over New Hampshire. Umass hung tough but came in third.

Next weekend, the teams travel to Hartford to face a traditionally tough Trinity team.

Walters took 6th in the 100 and Jeff White had 6th in the 110 hurdles. Steve Brown and Garfield Vaughn also had a good day.

"We had some kids who finished really well. They just finished out of the point scoring (1st-5th)," said O'Brien.

UMass was hurt by its inability to score points in the field events.

"We have a lot of major weaknesses in the field events," said O'Brien. It also didn't help to have to compete against Dartmouth.

"Dartmouth is so strong in the same events we are. That watered down our fire power," O'Brien said.

■ Baseball team steals two of three from N.Y. Tech at Lorden Field

Impagliazzo got a leadoff single for Tech and was sent home on Whitman's double down the rightfield line. Whitman took third on a sacrifice fly by Mike Fernandez and scored a run on a balk by Conroy while pitching to John Comer. After striking Comer out, Conroy gave up a single to Alex Protosow, who stole second and was driven in by John Urcioli's single. Urcioli then stole second and, after Conroy issued a walk to Jim Pepio, scored on Paul Bruno's single to right. Conroy loaded the bases when he walked the ninth batter, Dean DiRico, with two out but managed to strike out Impagliazzo to get out of the inning, down 4-0.

The Minutemen made up half of the difference immediately, as DiSarcina led off with a double and took third with Edwards reaching second on rightfielder Fernandez's error. DiSarcina scored on Seccafico's sacrifice to right and Edwards came home on Comeau's grounder to short. At the end of the first, Tech led 4-2.

Conroy cruised from there, allowing no runs and only four hits in the next five innings. UMass was just as baffled though, as Bears' pitcher Jim O'Connor held the Minutemen to five hits through the entire game, until he was relieved by John Manfredo in the seventh.

The Bears reached Conroy again in the final inning, getting five runs off of him with no outs before he was lifted in favor of Jeff Richardson. The righty closed out the frame but not before Tech had put it out of reach. UMass went quietly in their last at-bat as the New Yorkers took the second game, 10-2.

Sunday's game was blessed with good weather and both teams played well in it to start. Don Strange (2-1) pitched for UMass against the Bears' Jack DiMaio (1-1) in partial sunshine and almost no wind. The fielders were on as DiSarcina, Tom Murray and Comeau combined for a game-opening double-play. Tech also started out with a big play as Bear centerfielder Protosow made a beautiful diving back-handed stab of DiSarcina's line to left center.

After that, however, it went downhill for Tech. Edwards beat out a bunt for a single, took third on Seccafico's single and scored on a wild pitch with Seccafico going to second. He was driven in by Comeau's double, but the first baseman was left stranded as Kern lined out to center and Bright struck out.

UMass struck again in the third when Seccafico singled, stole second and took home on Comeau's second double of the day. The Minutemen added one more in the fifth when Edwards hit a long double into the gap in left center, went to third on third baseman Whitman's error on Seccafico's grounder and scored on Comeau's long sacrifice to left. Comeau had a big day, hitting two of three with two doubles and all three of UMass' RBIs.

That was the end of the scoring for the Minutemen — though Tech was not quite done for the day.

Whitman led off the sixth by reaching on a DiSarcina error and was driven in by Comer's shot over the rightfield fence. In the seventh, Peter Polis took second on Kern's throwing error, third on DiSarcina's error and scored while the infield was busy with a controversial double play that killed the rally. Tech second baseman Bobby George was called out for interference while sliding into second and, as a result, Impagliazzo was ruled out at first. George was thrown out of the game soon after for complaining about the call and after Dave Telgheder was brought in for UMass for relief, the Bears never threatened again. Strange got the win and Telgheder the save for the Minutemen.

Telgheder, who doesn't normally pitch relief, said he enjoyed the change of pace.

"It was fun," said Telgheder. "It was good having the pressure you don't usually have when you start. And I needed the work so it was good just to get out and pitch."

UMass coach Mike Stone was happy with the overall performance of the Minutemen and he felt that the reason Conroy had such a rough outing was that he was hurt by some bad calls in the first — which forced him to throw a lot of pitches.

"Whenever you've got a guy that has to throw 35 pitches in the first inning you know he's going to struggle," said Stone.

One of the main problems Stone saw was the lack of hitting by the Minutemen.

"I thought that this ballclub would have been better hitting then they have," said Stone. "They just haven't. Hopefully they'll come around."

Men's lax tames Wildcats

Gorillas double UNH, 16-8

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. – Better late than never for the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

The Gorillas were originally scheduled to travel to the University of New Hampshire on Saturday, but were given a rain check when April snow fell on the Granite State. The day's wait didn't do much harm, as UMass handled the Wildcats with moderate ease, 16-8 yesterday afternoon at Cowell Stadium.

UMass recovered from a sluggish first quarter with a seven-goal outburst during the second period, more than enough to run its record to 6-1 on the season and drop the young Wildcats to 0-4.

"I thought we played well after the first quarter. Our team defense played really well," said UMass coach Dick Garber, who by virtue of the victory has once again retained bragging rights in the Garber household. Garber's son Ted is the UNH coach.

The Gorillas bounced out to a quick 3-0 lead on a pair of goals by junior attack Scott Hiller and another by senior attack Paul Ganci, and looked ready to coast to a victory similar to last season's 17-3 pounding here in Amherst.

But the Wildcats, a foreign team to Garber despite the family ties, bounced back on a pair of late goals by Mark Botnick and Bruce MacDonald to close to 3-2 after one quarter.

The UMass men's lacrosse team continued its winning ways yesterday with a 16-8 victory over the University of New Hampshire.

UMass was also helping the cause by not clicking to full ability in the offensive end. The Gorillas looked sluggish at times, missing passes as well as golden scoring opportunities.

"I was slightly disenchanted with our attack being out of position on the 4-on-3's," Garber said. "We practice those regularly."

But everything started falling into place in the second. A quick goal by sophomore attack Jim McAleavey, followed by a John Gonzales tally pushed it to 5-2 and got the ball rolling. By period's end, a pair of goals by Rob Codignotto and single goals by Brett Jenks, Paul Ganci and Hugh O'Callahan helped open it to 10-4 at the half.

O'Callahan's goal came exactly at the buzzer as he took the ball the length of the field and connected on a give-and-go with Ganci just as time expired.

The second quarter was also marred by a slight brawl when McAleavey was pushed into the cage by a pair of UNH players, one of whom tried to use McAleavey's head for field goal practice. The melee seemed to serve as a wake-up call the Gorillas needed.

New Hampshire never threatened in the second half, giving Garber a good chance to get his troops some playing time. Ganci, Hiller and Codignotto all scored to finish off hat tricks in the second half, while Tim Soudan added a pair and Mike Cain a single goal to complete the scoring.

Steve Kern (batter above) and the rest of the Minutemen edged closer to .500 this weekend by taking two of three at home. UMass is now 9-10.

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Staff

After dropping a slugfest to Siena College Friday 12-9, the University of Massachusetts baseball team headed into a three-game weekend series with the Bears of the New York Institute of Technology looking to pick up two or three games in the homestand.

The Minutemen split the doubleheader on Saturday and won a squeaker on Sunday.

Saturday's first game was a pitcher's duel, featuring the Bears' senior lefthander Mark Hannon (1-2) against UMass' Paul Ciaglo (3-0). When New York Tech's Peter Impagliazzo led off with a triple and was sent home by Jim Whitman's grounder to third, it looked like it might be a repeat of Friday's high-scoring outing. But Ciaglo quickly settled down, striking out the next two batters to end the inning with Tech leading 1-0.

That was it for scoring until the third when UMass got four consecutive singles from shortstop Glen DiSarcina, left fielder Dave Edwards, right fielder Drew Seccafico and first baseman Drew Comeau. Comeau's single brought in DiSarcina and third baseman Steve Kern's sacrifice to center tallied Edwards, giving the Minutemen a 2-1 lead after three.

That's the way it would end up as both teams made scoring bids later on but were stifled by good defense and strong pitching. Hannon allowed only two runs on seven hits, had two strikeouts and only one walk. Fortunately for UMass, Ciaglo had a better day, giving up one run on five hits while striking out nine and walking four.

Unfortunately for UMass, however, the Bears got good back-to-back pitching games while the Minutemen didn't. UMass righty Brian Conroy struggled early in the second game, giving up four runs in the top of the first.

Women's lax stalls, falls 10-9

Gazelles lose 5th straight

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Well, they're not winning but at least the scores are getting progressively closer.

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team lost yet another game yesterday, 10-9, to Colgate University but in the process employed a new defensive game plan that was much more successful than in weeks past.

Now, if just the attack can get on track, the Gazelles might be able to win a game or two.

UMass coach Patti Bossio decided to drop her defense back in a zone at Springfield College (yes, that's UMass' home away from home) Sunday and it apparently crossed up the Red Raider forwards for most of the day.

The Gazelles had possession of the ball in the waning minutes of the first half and were threatening to tie the game and send it into overtime. But time ran out on the Gazelles and it was back to the locker room with its fifth loss in a row. UMass now stands at 1-5.

"Five more seconds and we may have scored again," Senior co-captain Lynn Hartman said. "We just lost the ball at really crucial times. We got possession of the ball but we just turned it over."

The Gazelles may not have capitalized on their scoring opportunities but Colgate did. The defense stopped the Red Raider offense from fast breaking but were called for fouls on a few occasions and that is when Colgate put the ball in the net.

Looking for sunnier days – rain halts tennis

If this spring's rain keeps falling, the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team just might end the year with a perfect record.

The Minutewomen have won their only match, back on April 1st and have been rained out of their other three scheduled dates.

Coach Mike Husted is worried. "The rain has affected the girls mentally and has got them real down."

Another problem for UMass that will also affect the team mentally is the now probable loss of no.1 singles player Christine Willse, who has severe tendinitis, for the year.

This weekend's Providence rainout has no makeup date yet, but the UConn match has been rescheduled for April 18th at home.

TENNIS NOTES: The UMass men's tennis team will be in action today against Rhode Island on the Boyden Courts (3 p.m.).

Men's track places 4th out of 5 in opener

By ROB SIMPSON

In its first meet of the season, the University of Massachusetts men's track team finished 4th Saturday in a five-team meet at Dartmouth, N.H.

Ivy League powerhouse Dartmouth College was the meet winner with 134 total points. Cornell University was 2nd with 88 and the University of New Hampshire was 3rd with 53. Next came UMass with 26 total points, and the University of Maine finished fifth with 0 points.

The day produced many good performances for UMass. Senior Fitz Hagan won the steeplechase in 9:21.2 to the delight of head coach Ken O'Brien. "It was his best early season performance, a sign of good things for Fitz."

Freshman Jerome Bledsoe placed second in the long jump, and recorded a personal best. The first-year jumper for UMass leaped 22 feet 10½ inches.

In the 100, sophomore Michael Grey grabbed 2nd with a time of 11.3 seconds. Grey ran a 10.9 in his trial heat. Reinardo Flores had another 2nd place finish for UMass. The senior ran a 14:46.0 in the 5000, a couple of seconds off his best time in the event.

The mile relay team of Grey, Stephen Doran, Steve Brown, and Garfield Vaughn ran a 3:23.3, good enough for another 3rd place.

O'Brien cited many other good performances for UMass. Freshman Kevin

Women's crew tops Wesleyan

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Masachusetts crew teams made a tough showing at the Connecticut River this weekend despite the bad weather. The women's team was successful in defeating Wesleyan, while the men's team had varying results.

The women's victory over Wesleyan was pretty much expected. The varsity boat edged their opponents by a length. The junior varsity was also victorious, cruising on to win by an impressive three lengths. The novice boat, on the other hand was defeated by the Wesleyan women.

The men's team had a bit more trouble. Their only victory was pulled out by the novice heavyweight boat – defeating both Wesleyan and the University of New Hampshire. Their victory is a positive sign

Other results . . .

Because assignment errors we are unable to report some of this past weekend's game stories. We do, however, have some of the results.

The University of Massachusetts softball team swept all four of its games this weekend. The Minutewomen beat St. Bonaventure University 10-0, 10-2 on Saturday and then eliminated defending Atlantic 10 champion Penn State 1-0, 4-0 on Sunday.

The rugby team wasn't quite as successful. The Minutemen's A squad lost to Army 34-3, the B squad fell 36-0, but the D squad did manage a victory, 31-9.

The sun will re-emerge today, with highs in the mid 40s. More of the same tomorrow.

PVTA rowdiness threatens service

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The weekend night PVTA bus service is becoming dangerous for both drivers and passengers and the University of Massachusetts Transit Authority is considering cancelling the routes as a result, transit officials said yesterday.

"What we all fear is going to happen is that one of these nights someone is going to get seriously hurt," said Christine Catalano, assitant operations manager for UMass Transit.

Any proposed discontinuation or modification of service would not take place until next semester because the UMass Transit is under contract with the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority to provide the present level of service through June 1, said Operations Manager Allan Byam.

But he stressed if the rowdiness on the weekend buses does not end, next semester may see the end of this service.

"People realize that nothing will happen to them" if they act rude or menacing to the drivers or other passengers because no one on the bus has any authority to stop them, he said.

"My recommendation is to stop the buses. I don't care [about a lack of service] as long as the drivers are safe," he said.

Some of the complaints drivers have made include people urinating on the bus, vomiting, fist fights among riders and being threatened with physical violence. In one instance a woman driver was grabbed around the neck by a male passenger who slammed her face into the windshield of the bus, Catalano said.

Most of the incidents are not as dramatic, said Catalano, but dealing with obnoxious passengers is not what the drivers are trained for.

"It's just a case of real disrespect to the drivers. During the day [passengers] don't act like this so why is it okay to do it at 9 p.m.?" she said.

Ninety percent of Transit drivers are undergraduate UMass students, she said.

In the past, Amherst police officers rode on the weekend routes to ensure the safety of the drivers and passengers, Byam said, but when Amherst instituted new laws regulating noise levels in town the police started doubling up on weekend patrols, taking officers off the buses.

International student club draws from across the globe

By LISA MARUYAMA
Collegian Correspondent

The International Students Association is open to more people than just foreign students at the University of Massachusetts, according to Quynh Dang, president of the organization.

Dang said the Amherst chapter of the ISA has existed for 13 years as a non-profit, apolitical organization. The club's membership fluctuates because most of them are busy gradute students who come and go frequently, and some are more active than others, he said.

The majority of the members are Asian, consisting of students from Thailand, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, and Japan among others, he said. Although there are some students from countries like Puerto Rico, Africa, Ireland, Greece and parts of the Middle East, Dang said that sometimes non-Asians are hesitant to join because they are the minority.

"We're a club that draws people together of many nationalities, but acknowledges and respects the individual differences," Dang said.

California politician speaks on community empowerment

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The gay community will not get the rights it deserves unless its members work to gain power, the president of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors told a group of students and activists last night at the Student Union Ballroom.

> "If we're going to make it, it's because we're going to be in power."
> – Harry Britt

Harry Britt, who has been a member of the board for 10 years, told the audience of about 90 that many gays do not realize their potential for power, explaining that he felt powerless when he first realized that he was gay.

"It took me 30 years to get over it (fear) . . . if I ever get over it," he said. "Few of us learn how to be powerful."

He recalled his experiences in San Francisco's Castro Street section, and the effect that slain city Supervisor Harvey Milk had on the community.

"Harvey . . . was so focused, so clear. He simply could not tolerate the fact that fundamental decisions were made by people who did not (know) our lives," Britt said.

"We were not in power," he added. "Our wisdom and creativity were not being listened to."

He said that political influence is important to make any social change for gays.

"If we're going to make it, it's because we're going to be in power," he said.

Also speaking last night was Arline Isaacson of the Massachusetts Gay and Lesbian Political Caucus. The group has been instrumental in the progress of the Massachusetts Gay and Lesbian Civil Rights Bill prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. It has passed the state House of Representatives and is awaiting passage in the senate.

She explained that the group is doing more in the legislature than just the bill. "We take care of legislation . . . that affects our community," she said.

Isaacson also stressed the group's need for financial expansion. "We've got to be more professional," she said.

FIRST BALL — Harvard University hockey coach Bill Cleary is shown giving it his best as he throws out the ceremonial first ball during festivities during opening day at Boston's Fenway Park prior to the game between the Red Sox and the Cleveland Indians. Cleary and members of the NCAA champion Harvard hockey team, in background, were the honored guests yesterday.

Noted liberal economist not likely to attend Republican fundraiser

BOSTON (AP) — When lifelong Democrat John Kenneth Galbraith received an embossed invitation from Vice President Dan Quayle to join the GOP's "exclusive" Senatorial Inner Circle, the Harvard economist hastened to accept the unexpected offer.

"But thus far we've not received his check for $1,000, so his acceptance sounds a little hollow," Quayle spokesman David Beckwith said yesterday.

Politicians on both sides of the fence have been chuckling over Galbraith's wry response to the apparent computer mixup that spawned his invitation to join the fundraising group, whose annual dues go toward getting Republican candidates elected to the Senate.

"I don't think Mr. Galbraith will be there," said Wendy DeMocker, a spokeswoman for the Republican National Party offshoot.

Toxic chemical use targeted

MassPIRG pushes for state law that would limit industrial use

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Correspondent

Aaron Rome, a member of the MassPIRG, said he is positive that the Toxics Use Reduction Bill, designed to help industries reduce their use of toxic chemicals, will be approved by the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

"We have over 100 sponsors in the House already," Rome, a University of Massachusetts student, said.

MassPIRG researches environmental problems and seeks support for legislation from Massachusetts citizens, according to chairman Dave Kaptinski, who said the organization's latest endeavor is not being fought solely by UMass.

"We are working with 30 college campuses across the state," he said. "We want to get the endorsements of several chancellors by the end of the semester, then go up to the legislators and say 'All these people think [the Toxic Use Reduction Bill] is a good idea.'"

Kaptinski said the bill would be more effective than current laws because it takes precautionary measures.

"In the past, people have gone around after the fact to clean up toxic waste," he said. "The whole idea [of the bill] is to cut back at the beginning."

The first step of the proposed bill involves companies reporting the amounts and types of hazardous chemicals they use, Kaptinski said.

Rome said the reports are not intended to incriminate companies, because "the point is to work with them to find new ways to use non-toxic chemicals."

The second step involves the phasing out of toxic chemicals, he said.

"Alternatives will be studied for five to 10 years," said Rome. "No chemical will be phased out unless an alternative is economically feasible, so companies will not be harmfully affected."

There has already been some success with phasing out hazardous chemicals, he said.

Greeks give barbecue to shelter

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Representatives of the Greek Area donated more than 700 pounds of food to the Amherst Survival Center last weekend, according to the volunteer coordinator of the center.

The annual Greek Area barbecue scheduled for Saturday was postponed due to poor field and weather conditions. The hamburgers, hot dogs, buns and condiments for the picnic had already been purchased, and the Greeks could not store the food, said Michal Mizrachi, vice president of fund raising and philanthropy for the Greek Area.

"We figured the Amherst Survival Center was the place that needed the food the most," Mizrachi said. "The donation was very spontaneous, it wasn't discussed or planned."

The money for the Greek Area barbecue comes directly out of the Greek Area budget. The rescheduled barbecue will also be funded from the budget.

"It was a $700 donation, right out of the Greek's budget," Mizrachi said.

The donation of several hundred pounds of meat will feed over 1,000 people, according to Edith Ann Esbensen, the volunteer coordinator of the center.

"This is just wonderful. We haven't served meat here for a long time. We usually get emergency canned goods," she said. "We've been getting low on food, and the number of people coming in for lunch is growing. Windfalls like this are truly needed and appreciated."

The Amherst Survival Center, located in North Amherst, has been in existence for about ten years, Esbensen said. The town of Amherst donated the building and pays for heating and general maintenance, according to Esbensen.

"The town has been very supportive," she said. "Much of the donations are from townspeople. They are incredibly generous, donating all sorts of things."

The center provides free clothing, household appliances and food for those in need. Each month, the center serves over 2,000 people, according to Esbensen.

"Some are repeat customers," she said. "We're an advocacy for the people, we consider the Amherst Survival Center a community center."

There are two paid staff people, Esbensen and Evangeline Westcott, the director of the center. They depend on volunteers to help run the center.

"We have between 40 and 50 volunteers, it may seem like a lot, but they don't have a regular schedule. We always need more, because there's so much work to be done," Esbensen said.

Beat poet to 'howl' tonight

Poet Allen Ginsberg, who pioneered the "Beat Generation" with Jack Kerouac, is scheduled to speak at 8 p.m. today at the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom.

He has written 15 books of poetry, including Reality Sandwiches in 1963 and First Blues in 1975. Ginsberg has authored 11 prose books and produced five films and five record albums of prose. The Atlantic Monthly, the New Yorker, Rolling Stone and the New York Times are among the publications to which he has contributed. He has received fellowships from the Guggenheim Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Ginsberg was brought to trial in 1957 on charges of obscenity in his poem Howl. The book was declared legal. Parts of the text were written during and about experiments on the effects of Peyote and LSD which Ginsberg conducted with Dr. Timothy Leary during the 1950s.

STPEC class publication breaks ground

By PAUL McALEER
Collegian Correspondent

Students in the Junior Seminar II of the Social Thought and Political Economy program at the University of Massachusetts have released their second desk-top published book, Revolutionary Popular Culture.

What excites class members most is the precedent the book set by being the first desk-top publishing by undergraduates for undergraduates, according to Terisa Turner, the class instructor.

She said the book is part of "a coming explosion in desk-top publishing" by any people wishing to utilize it. She said writers no longer have to go to a major publishing company when the technology is accessible and affordable to anyone.

Unfortunately, Turner has been laid off in the recent series of budget cuts. Helen Johnson, a coordinator in the STPEC department, said she did not think the project would continue because "it has been [Turner's] project."

The class produced the whole book, at under $3 each, through a "collective effort in which each class member could choose any number of roles having to do with the completion of the book," said Matthew Collins, a student in the class.

In the book, each student was allowed to write about what he or she "believed and wanted to write about," Turner said.

Topics in the book include: Tracy Chapman, South Africa, and an unreleased work by C.L.R. James, a "PAN-Africanist and revolutionary intellectual," she said.

Turner, an energy economist teaching in the women's studies and STPEC programs, said the entire class, herself included, had an equal voice in planning and producing both books.

"The more I stay out of the way, the more they produce things that amaze me," she said.

Terisa Turner (bottom row, center) and students have produced their second book, using desk-top publishing.

And the STPEC effort has introduced others to desk-top publishing.

Turner said she has been contacted by Amherst parents who want to publish a new American history text for eighth graders in local schools. In addition, 25 African countries are considering following the process for textbooks in their schools, she said.

Hundreds of thousands of people poured into Washington over the weekend for the pro-choice march, in a re-affirmation of the 1973 Supreme Court case that legalized abortion.

Pro-choice marchers feel power in numbers

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — There was an aura of power in the nation's capital Sunday as waves of cries for justice and equality for women rippled across the hundreds of thousands of abortion rights activists assembled in front of the Washington Monument.

It was the largest women's rights march in history, marked by roaring chants that rang between flags and signs emblazoned with purple, white and gold stripes reminiscent of the late 1800s suffrage movement, which fought for women's right to vote.

Activists also wore white to symbolize the rebirth of a passion similar to the days when women were fighting for a different cause.

City subway stations were clogged by the masses of abortion rights protesters struggling to reach the sidewalk, their shouts piercing the stale air. The march moved slowly to its Pennsylvania Avenue destination, a bottleneck of generations and genders sharing one goal: freedom of choice.

The march was triggered by the US Supreme Court's decision to hear a Missouri abortion case dispute, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services. The high court's decision, expected to be handed down later this month, could overturn the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, which legalized abortion.

The provisions in the Missouri case focus mainly on prohibiting state funding to women seeking abortion and increasing restrictions on state clinics and employees who perform abortions.

Protesters in Washington are concerned about an upcoming Supreme Court Case that they fear could overturn Roe vs. Wade.

The most controversial provision, however, is the declaration life begins at conception, not at birth — a constant source of dissension between anti-abortionists and pro-choice advocates.

Terisa Turner, a visiting women's studies professor at the University of Massachusetts who attended the march, said the declaration was "absurd" and said the provision would force people to add the months between conception and birth to their current age.

Turner said, "If we have to change our age, it's going to wreak havoc."

But, UMass political science Professor Sheldon Goldman, who also attended the march, said it is likely the court will dismiss the provision when they hear the case.

"They are legislating a religious view," Goldman said. "The courts could probably avoid that because there really is no legal issue or action."

Many people refused to speculate whether the march will have any direct effect on the court's decision, but Goldman said the large activist turnout is likely to cause conservative Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony Kennedy to vote to upholding Roe v. Wade. He added that it is possible the court will advocate more stringent state guidelines, but not to the extent of illegalizing abortion.

"I suspect the court will not overturn Roe v. Wade, he said. "Surely if Sandra Day O'Connor votes to overturn it, she will be remembered as one of the great villains in history."

Turner said she felt "empowered" by the march and suspects the surge of activism will spur more pro-choice people to action.

"The momentum is very much in the hands of pro-choice," she said.

Goldman said the march was not only for pro-choice, but also an effort to protect the sanctity of human rights.

"It was not a march in favor of abortion," he said. "It was a march in favor of human choice and a woman's being able to exercise a basic human right to determine their own fate."

For many, however, the march was more than a fight to maintain freedom of choice for future generations. The sea of wire coathangers brandished around people's waists and necks were sobering reminders of a time before legalized abortion when a "back-alley" and a coathanger served as a makeshift clinic.

Even the most ardent protester was visibly stricken by the explicit photos of a naked and bloodied woman lying face down in a hotel room. The woman was abandoned and left to die after a botched abortion.

One poster brandished a child's scrawl and illustration and read, "My mom had an illegal abortion. I don't miss the baby, I miss my mom."

Chants of "never again" and "we will never go back" illustrated a growing fear in women that the "back alley" may once again become the place where abortions will take place.

Carole Cumps, a foreign student advisor, said some American students who have gone to other countries also join the organization to maintain ties with foreign cultures, traditions and people.

Dang said the ISA is a social organization, as well as educational. In the past, it has held events like Thanksgiving dinners, trips to Boston and Montreal in the fall, and skiing trips in the spring, he said. The UMass chapter of ISA sometimes gets together with the chapters from Mount Holyoke and Smith colleges, he said.

Every year at the end of May, several active members and the president of ISA are selected to go to a conference held by the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs to learn leadership skills, said Cumps.

NAFSA is a professional organization consisting of 4,000 to 5,000 members in the field of international education, including foreign advisors and admission specialists, and both American and foreign diplomatic personnel. Last year the conference was held in Washington D.C., and this year, it will be in Minnesota, she said.

The ISA's primary event of the year is its International Fair, which will be on April 29, she said. In the past, more than 2,500 people have helped organize this event, and it is here that students are able to share a bit of their heritage, Dang said.

"It's our chance to show the different countries' crafts, arts, and foods in a laid-back, friendly atmosphere," she said. "It's open for everyone to come and check out if you have anything you want to contribute to, or gain from."

The fair is scheduled for 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

"Computer chips that once were cleaned with an acid wash are now cleaned with an airbrush," Rome said, adding that the research programs will be funded with fees paid by companies to file toxic chemical use reports.

Large companies — those that produce over 25,000 pounds of toxic waste — will pay a $500 filing fee, and small companies who produce less than 10,000 pounds of toxic waste will pay a $50 fee, he said.

Kaptinski said he is as optimistic as Rome about the bill.

UMass Transit has been working with the Dean of Students office, the UMass police department and other administrative agencies to find a solution to the problem but so far they have not been able to, Byam said.

One idea is to put UMass police on the buses, but the department is also short on personnel and there is a problem with the jurisdiction of UMass officers outside of campus boundaries, he said.

"We understand we have a responsibility to the community but that responsibility involves safe transportation," Catalano said.

Becoming aware

Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Awareness Week began April 7 and runs until April 14. Workshops, panel discussions, lectures, films, entertainment, and lectures will be featured to inform the public about lesbian, gay, and bisexual concerns such as homophobia, heterosexism, AIDS, and civil rights.

We encourage people to attend these activities. They are not only designed to advocate lesbian, gay, and bisexual rights, but are also concerned with addressing the issues facing the homosexual community and combating common prejudice through education. Louise Godchaux, a lesbian who works with the LBGA, said: "The purpose of awareness week is to foster more understanding. . . it's not constructive that two communities that live so close together be afraid of each other. I've been grateful for the support I receive from straight allies."

The LBGA will have a table on the Campus Center concourse with the schedule of events, informational pamphlets, pins, and balloons. If you support the lesbian, gay, and bisexual community, show it. If you don't know very much about the community and the issues they face, this is the time to learn more.

In need of a history lesson

Meredith O'Brien

The 60's and 70's are typically viewed as the periods of revolt, of youthful protest, of rebellion. When the parents of 60's teenagers remember this period of American history, they shudder.

These parents think of the dreaded long hair, flower children, hippies, folk music, violence and morals lost in a cloud of smoke. These young adults were angry, felt oppressed and were forced to rebel against the naive constrictions of parents who grew up in the conservative McCarthy era.

Somehow, I really don't think that the people of the 80's "establishment" have read their contemporary history, or simply brushed it aside as insignificant.

Have you noticed that the trends among students conflict? There has been a surge in 60's style dress — the long hair, tye-dyed clothes, and peace insignias (I have heard those who sport these fashions referred to as "earthy-crunchy").

In contrast to this, recent statistics show that more and more conservative and extremely capitalistic students are entering the universities. These are the people who grew up in the Reagan era of conservative dogmatism. This appears to be a conflict between a 50's and 60's era, within one generation of students.

Racial conflicts have dramatically increased and grown more intense (Miami riots, police brutality, clashes on college campuses). Conservatives are looking to put a muzzle on the record industry with warning label to protect the innocence of the young. There is a "war on drugs" that resembles a religious crusade, almost like the prohibition movement. Colleges are growing conservative. Doesn't this sound a little like the 60's?

History repeats itself — we take that for granted, but seldom do we ever do anything to prevent us from making the same mistakes. Let's take this university for example:

The administration doesn't seem to have studied history by its recent actions and policy statements. Alcohol bans, snowball fight bans, fraternities being thrown out of the university for keg parties, reversion to single sex bathrooms, rigid dorm rules (though not as rigid as the archaic Boston University curfew rules), these all point to trends that would make college life like the 50's again, which is what these administrations are hoping for. Do you think that it's coincidence that every other floor in Orchard Hill has been painted pink and blue, after reinstating single sex bathrooms?

"Surrogate parent" is the new role that these institutions have assumed. The administrations fear the loss of student morality and student rowdiness (fear of students enjoying themselves) in an increasingly conservative era.

Racism is the equivalent of communism to the universities. Once charged with racism, the university's reputation is tarnished, funds are lost. So, in the newly founded UMass conservatism, this administration passed an alcohol ban to solve this racism on campus. Since, in their eyes, alcohol promotes racism, this was the thing to do.

It's scary to look at all of this going on around us. Our nation seems to be prepping for another youth rebellion. We haven't learned a thing from history, because if we had, we would not be reviving policies that triggered rebellion in the 60's. Placing more restrictions on the students is not the way to keep us in line.

I am glad that I will soon be out of the dorms, before the administration finishes creating its pseudo-conservative, 1950's atmosphere of overbearing restriction. What I can not escape, is the inevitability of history repeating itself, of seeing people make the same stupid mistakes, being blind to the repercussions of their actions.

They said it . . .

"I saw my wrinkles in their wrinkles. You know, one looks at herself in the mirror every morning, and she doesn't see the difference, she doesn't realize that she is aging. But then she finds a friend who was young with her, and the fiends isn't young anymore, and all of a sudden, like a slap on her eyes, she remembers that she, too, isn't young anymore." UMass makes life hard for disabled

Recently, I became temporarily handicapped after recent knee surgery and was amazed at the way the handicapped students are discriminated against on this campus.

First, is the Parking situation at the University of Massachusetts. I was shocked to find that when I applied to obtain a temporary handicapped sticker, I was charged a fee of $15 per month. The fact that UMass takes advantage of a student that has no other parking option is shameful. I don't mind paying my E-lot fee and hiking in every day. However, when I am physically unable to make this walk, the university should not view it as an opportunity to make a quick buck.

Furthermore, handicap permits are assigned to specific lots. If I have a permit for Boyden gymnasium, I cannot park close to Lederle Graduate building. UMass has a large enough campus to make a system such as this unfeasible.

Secondly, the university, has a so-called handicapped transportation bus. I found that this system can be useless. Last week, I had to get across campus for a class. I called the bus transit office one hour prior to my class and was met with sixty minutes of busy signals. When I called the transportation department and the PVTA office, I was told that there way nothing they could do. Needless to say, I missed my class.

Lastly, there a number of building on campus that are inaccessible to students in wheelchairs. Until you are in that position, you do not realize how many buildings discriminate. Many buildings have stairs on every entrance that create hazards for those on crutches and inaccessibility for those in wheelchairs.

While I understand that UMass is undergoing a budget crunch, I don't find this to be a viable excuse. Discrimination upon any group is not only illegal, it is unforgiveable.

Double-standard for conduct wrong

Rusty Denton

This is the sixth year now that the UMass administration has officially sponsored Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week. If you believe the rhetoric you'll hear this week, the only reason such events are necessary is that people need to be alerted to homophobia (fear of homosexuals or of latent homosexual feelings) and to heterosexism (prejudice against homosexuals).

I've been called a homophobe a number of times; name-calling is always easier than real dialogue, I suppose. However, as long as they're not coming after me with a baseball bat, I'm not afraid of anyone's sexual orientation. And since I'm also not threatened by my own potential to be homosexual — a potential that I would guess we all have — I have grounds to say I'm not homophobic.

But this issue of heterosexism; yes, indeed, I think any government has the right and the obligation to decide certain sex acts are harmful to the nation's future and to limit the influence of those who perpetrate those sex acts. If that is heterosexism, so be it.

When are sex acts harmful? The answer to that depends on how honest we are about recognizing absolutes. A relativist can rationalize sodomy today, puritanism tomorrow, bestiality or child molestation the next day, and perhaps rape, incest and sadism the day after that. Without some concept of God, ultimate justice, and absolute right and wrong, sexual mores are just a game whose rules change with the seasons.

Not many of us are as cynical as that, however, so I think it's fair to challenge homosexuality using standards that are widely accepted. For instance, think about active bisexuality by married people. What significant difference is there between that and cheating on your partner in a heterosexual way? None. And just like ordinary adulterers, married bisexuals rob their kids because one parent is sucked dry by guilt and the other by a lost trust. I've never heard of the homosexual community telling married persons not to satisfy adulterous homosexual feelings: why not? Is extramarital cheating cool when it's bisexual?

Or consider fornication (sex between singles). When straight people are promiscuous, it is widely assumed that they are either unable or unwilling to form lasting relationships, that they are emotionally troubled. But when a gay man sodomizes with scores of partners in a year — and that is not unusual — we are asked to accept it as the lifestyle of an emotionally healthy person. It doesn't compute.

The lesbian situation is analogous. There is a concept in straight society that says someone "on the rebound" (recovering from a broken relationship) does not have the emotional capital to form mature partnerships. But lesbians, 90 percent of whom were abused by their fathers (resulting in the worst kind of broken relationships) tell us the sorts of love patterns they have are normal. Normal to whom? Those who never quite recovered from paternal abuse during their formative years?

Perhaps because of Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Weeks, I've come to have quite a bit of empathy for homosexuals in the last few years. It's not because I think their sexual patterns should be endorsed as a wholesome alternative lifestyle; it's because the psychology that shapes their sexual choices isn't alien.

That doesn't make those choices socially desirable. The homosexual community is asking for a nation that discourages cheating, promiscuity and emotional baggage among heterosexuals to sanction them among bisexuals, gay men and lesbians.

Their message is that it doesn't matter, and that is harmful.

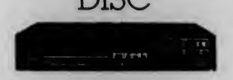
Acid jazz, PVTA fill the hours of junkie's day

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Greetings friends! Bet you're glad its me this week and not that nasty, smelly pseudo-Disc Flunkie DRUKMAN or DRECKMAN as I have now decided to call him, after he committed all kinds of unforgivable offenses, not the least of which was associating my good name with the scumbag Saesenach types that exist south of the border. And he has the cheek to call me naive!

DISC



JUNKIE

Anyway the misunderstanding will be swiftly cleared up (a case of the old "stitch in time" treatment) the next time he rears his visage in this office with another one of those flip-hip-rinky-dinky-yello-dot-matrix-technotwaddle columns of his. But you know I actually sometimes stoop to feeling sorry for poor ol' Dreckman, because in the war of slick PR cliches which has broken out between us over the past few weeks, I hold a distinct advantage over him: Being an editor, I have what is known in the trade as "final cut," whereas he, as a mere correspondent, has what is known in the trade as "didley squat." But hey! I've got better things to do with my column inches than indulge Dreckman's somewhat juvenile predilection to petty name-calling.

I was going to spend this week ragging off on the latest excrement from Windham Hill, but it's a soft target and besides, their entire roster isn't worth the paper the Collegian is printed on. Think about it.

So instead I tossed aside the usual pile of promotional freebie gunk that lay gathering dust on the arts desk and set out for Main St. Records, bent on a fix of acid jazz freshly smuggled in from the UK. In the event, I got more than I bargained for.

The record I originally went in for was Acid Jazz & Other Illicit Grooves Vol 2. (The Freedom Principle). If you remember I raved about the original Illicit Grooves a few months back, by which time Vol 2. was already available back in Blighty, so every night I prayed to the God of imports that it would somehow wing its way to my turntable. Well for thirteen bucks and a hellish busride courtesy of PVTA, my prayers were answered.

Freedom Principle incorporates a more diverse range of styles and artists than the original "rare groove-obsessive" Vol. 1. The enfant terrible of the London jazz scene, Jason Rebello, gives us a hard-boppin' keyboard workout with "The Shrimp," while Slow Fuse strut their Superfly stuff and infuse a groove which is hotter than a pig with dysentery.

The Jazz Renegades pop up again, this time showcasing the vocal prowess of Sarah Jane Morris (who you may remember shared the vocals with wee Jimmy Sommerville on the Communards' version of that mammoth disco classic, "Don't Leave me This Way."). Well on "Mothers of the Future" she sounds a tad like Corrine from Swing Out Sister (another of my pseudo-jazz vices) but the furious fretless bass riffs, punctured with bursts of sax make this another must.

But best of the bunch for me has to be Snowboy's "House of Latin" which takes latin house to new levels of funkability by incorporating a crankin' piano solo into the beat psychosis. Best jazz-house record since Will Downing's brilliant dancefloor transcription of Coltrane's "Love Supreme".

So much for the old stuff. But what about Totally Wired, a compilation of artists on Gilles Peterson's recently formed Acid Jazz label, that I suddenly found thrust into my hand by an overly helpful salesclerk. Thank God for Baybanks.

This is even more of a melting-pot than Illicit Grooves Vol. 2, a clubland nirvana, featuring everything from the disturbingly Maceo-like New Jersey Kings, to the scintilating steel-band sounds of Haryou's "Latin Jam." Style fascist and no-wave beat poet Galliano turns up in live in Tokyo with the Renegades and, in the face of "Six Sharp Fists," a pretty silly rant called "Frederick Lies Still," but the back-up is pure Mayfield circa Back to the World, and all the more welcome for it.

Totally Wired has its fair share of proper jazz too, like the Ulf Sandberg Quartet's "Bolivia," but the best results are acheived on tracks like The Bukky Leo Quintet's "Olumo Rock," where radical rhythms are fused with totally twisted playing. And to show how completely eclectic the acid jazz phenomenon is, Batu Casu throw in the completely percussive "Bangs A Bongo" whose mesmeric pulse is just as infinitely listenable and as infinitely danceable as anything else here.

And now I'll have to talk to the Big Guy about getting me a hold of Playing for Real and Hippy House & Happy Hop, both on the Acid Jazz label. Until then . . . later.

John Updike
Alfred A. Knopf

John Updike is a good writer. This fact is evident from his memoir, Self Consciousness, a book containing six auto-biographical essays in which the author reveals, among other things, his stuttering problem, his sense of religion and of self, and his feelings during the Vietnam War, in which he did not fight. John Updike has written extensively for The New Yorker, and has received a number of awards, including the Pulitzer Prize for fiction.

John Updike is a good writer in the same way that

BOOK REVIEW

Madonna or Julio Iglesias are good musicians, in the way that Tom Hanks is a good actor, and in the way Dan Quayle is a good politician. That is to say that technically, Updike is very polished. He knows how to write. This means he is capable of expressing himself a great deal more fully than those of us who have not mastered an artistic form of communication. Herein lies the problem.

In 1945 somebody wrote, "After Auschwitz there can be no poetry." But for a very few notable exceptions, (including Alan Ginsberg, of the beat movement, who visits UMass tonight), there has been absolutely no major literary movement of any force, wit or importance in the United States since 1945. What we have had instead is fiction concerned with middle class social and sexual discomfort, usually repressed to great intellectual depths (i.e. anal retention) and force fed by class rags such as the New Yorker. Before the war W.B. Yeats wrote the sadly still accurate lines, "The best lack all conviction/while the worst are full of passionate intensity."

John Updike is one of our best writers today. Based on this memoir, the closest we have to an autobiography, it is plainly obvious that all he has to offer are the thoughts and feelings of a stunningly mediocre man, with the passion of a superficially viewed Steven Wright, the wit of George Bush and the vision of a million middle aged (an affliction known to begin in the late teens) middle class white suburban assholes (a la George Bush), all tossed up with a hint of the intellectual (that is, thought over action). This man's utter lack of conviction, style or worth goes somewhere toward explaining his critical and commercial success and in turn the current state of this nation. Tom Hanks nearly got an Oscar, Madonna gets Grammys, Quayle is the Vice-President; so too Updike is revered for his writing.

He is safe. He says nothing and presents it without strength or relevance to anything other than himself, even in his fiction. We live in a land of safe sex, safe politics (ignorance is bliss), safe cars, safety from intoxicants and safe art. It is inevitable that Updike would be the darling of most critics. Updike writes that "... the immortality of printed reproduction . . . was central to my artistic impulse." Does this mean that the idea of people seeing his work is more important than what he has to say? "To be in print was to be saved," Updike writes in reference to a stammering problem and subsequent social/communication problems. This is a nice reason to write. Nothing more.

The Fine Arts Center exploded with color Thursday night, when the Polish dance company Magnificent Mazowske gave a spirited and vigorous performance before a capacity audience.

Mazowske is the national folk dance troupe of Poland, whose founders, in the 1940's, were striving to preserve their country's folklore, traditional dances, costume and song. Now, fifty years later, the company entertains audiences all over the world.

audience was "Carnival Time in the Holy Cross Mountains," a light hearted, often comical dance, which involved several participants disguising themselves as animals and other fantastic creatures. "Dances from the Tatra Mountains" was another favorite: this time the men performed skillful movements and breathtaking feats of strength to impress their partners.

Lively Polish folk music, characterized by syncopation and sudden changes of tempo, accompanied the dances. It was the costumes, however, which were the most spectacular. Some of the dancers can expect to make as many as 25 costume changes in the course of one evening's performance. Each costume was both intricate and colorful, with the "Grand Finale", displaying the various national costumes, being the most memorable. A quality performance overall.

R.E.M.
The Centrum
April 9

WORCESTER — R.E.M. is in a period of change. Michael Stipe thinks he is Iggy Pop and Peter Buck has expanded his axe selection, using a Gibson Les Paul, in addition to his trademark Rickenbacker, giving the band a new heavy grunge sound more reminiscent of the Stooges than the Byrds. Sunday night at the Centrum, R.E.M. kicked butt through a set that consisted primarily of songs from the band's last three albums.

During the first hour, the band ripped through most of its heavier songs. The theme of the first half seemed to be underwater exploration, but most of the songs sent the crowd into outer space. "Turn You Inside Out" was insane as Stipe screamed the chorus into a megaphone while the stage was swallowed by yellow lights. They also burned through "Exhuming McCarthy," "Orange Crush," "Begin The Begin" and "It's The End Of The World As We Know It."

Stripe proclaimed before one song, "This song is about a small country south of ours and a very big country north of theirs. El Salvador is praying for euthanasia," and then the band kicked into a rousing version of "Welcome To The Occupation." In addition to the newer material, they also played "Sitting Still" and "Pretty Persuasion." The high point of the first half was the version of "Feeling Gravity's Pull" which Buck introduced with a few delicious minutes of white noise feedback before the band launched into the haunting song, which they played enveloped in white light, silouetted against the video screen behind them, which showed eerie footage of a swamp from above and below the surface of the water.

The second half of the show was slower and in more traditional R.E.M. style. They played "You Are Everything" (Buck on mandolin, Mills on accordion and Berry on bass), "King of Birds" and "Crazy." They also did a few covers, Television's "See No Evil" (which ended with Stripe sitting in the lotus position at the front of the stage), and George Gershwin's "Summertime." They played an incredible version "Auctioneer (Another Engine)," a semi-acoustic version of "Perfect Circle" and eventually finished the night off with a cover of the Velvet Underground's "Afterhours," with part of the untitled song from Green thrown in the middle. continued on page 11

No baloney from rock king Diddley

By DAMON GREENFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Bo Diddley
Pearl Street/Ten Below
April 7

Friday night at Pearl Street, Bo Diddley had his mojo workin'. His pulsing two hour set left no one in doubt of who is reigning blues linkage from old. Founder of the world renowned "Bo Diddley beat," which has influenced rock'n'rollers from Elvis to Hendrix, Diddley proved he can slide and burn like nobody else. He had an axe to grind (a custom square Kinman), and the proof was in the puddin'.

Running through classics like "I'm a Man" and "Roadrunner," Diddley brought the roots to the surface. He plays the blues the way they are meant to be - raw and primitive. Bo Diddley comes on like a runaway train, grinding and moving, giving punch to a potent rock'n'roll message.

Bo Diddley's roots run deep. His style of blues along with those of Howlin' Wolf, Muddy Waters, Sonny Boy Williamson and many others have shaped music like no other musical form. Rock'n'roll is the offspring of the angst cultivated from the blues. Without the blues what do you have? - music that is soulless, devoid of adrenalized funk. Most blues have shriveled up to die with their masters, but Bo Diddley is keeping his "beat" pumping strong and bawdy.

Pure blues come from the source, not from white trash rip-offs like George Thorogood and New Jersey scumbags such as Bruce Springsteen. The real folk is not in the armpits of New Jersey. Folk blues is a product of the opression from which it evolved. It took Elvis Presley to bring its thrash, anger and sexuality to white America, Bo Diddley and forgotten others to produce it.

Diddley proved its spirit is still alive. He stated during his show, he has to do it "his way" from gut to fingertips. And that's just what Bo Diddley has done, revolutionize music his way, unmanipulated by technotrash root beer rock'n'roll. Diddley stood tall Friday night, maintaining his integrity and rock'n'roll grit. "He is a man" - proved through duration and influence.

Diddley's guts are in his music, not in his image. To get a two hour show today is a rarity, a vacancy without the bogus "guitar hero" posings of today's anti-innovators. Bo Diddley is for real. What you see is what you get - truth, dignity and gut-wrenching blues. No one can slide and grind like Bo Diddley. With Elvis dead and James Brown in jail - find the living king of rock'n'roll in one Bo Diddley.

The show was an improvement on past tours. The band has regained the enthusiasm that made it so popular early on. Stipe and Buck were jumping all over the place, going insane during the faster songs. The band added a fifth member, the ex-guitarist from the dB's, who filled out their sound, playing both guitar and keyboards. Although they played the frothy "Stand," most of the rest of the set was heavy grunge rock and roll. The light and video show was excellent, bringing the band's psychedelic nature into play.

R.E.M. is continuing in their direction of "non-R.E.M." sounding material, but despite the lack of older material, the show was one of the best the band has done since the Lifes Rich Pageant tour. R.E.M. is no longer the king of college radio, but it is definitely the best mainstream band of the 1980's.

Four found guilty in one of nation's largest robberies

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — One defendant was cleared and four convicted yesterday on charges stemming from the second-largest cash heist in US history, the $7.1 million Wells Fargo robbery.

The money allegedly was used to fund a militant group seeking to overthrow the government in Puerto Rico.

Key defendant Juan Segarra Palmer III was convicted on nine charges, cleared of one and the jury continueddeliberating on three other weapons-related charges.

Segarra Palmer was convicted on robbery-related charges stemming from the Sept. 12, 1983, theft of cash at the Wells Fargo depot in West Hartford.

The only defendant cleared of criminal charges was Carlos Ayes Suarez.

Segarra, a Harvard graduate, was charged in all 16 counts of the indictment and faced up to 150 years in prison if convicted on all counts.

Segarrra acknowledged he knew about the robbery beforehand and received the stolen money to finance the activities of Los Macheteros, Spanish for "machete-wielders," a group seeking the overthrow of the US government in Puerto Rico.

But Segarra steadfastly denied that he helped plan or execute the robbery, as the government charged.

The other four defendants were charged with conspiracy and with either helping transport the stolen money or using part of it to finance Three Kings Day toy giveaways in Hartford and Puerto Rico on Jan. 6, 1985.

The government contended that Los Macheteros recruited Wells Fargo guard Victor Gerena to carry out the robbery, then helped Gerena escape to Cuba, where he is believed to live now.

The government presented 110 witnesses and more than 700 pieces of evidence, including tape-recorded conversations and documents seized from Los Macheteros members.

During the 5 1/2-month trial, prosecutors presented evidence that Los Macheteros were desperate for money in 1983 and that Segarra was put in charge of getting it. Other evidence indicated Segarra was sent from Puerto Rico to New England more than a month before the robbery and returned to the island within weeks afterward.

About $80,000 in what was believed to be stolen money was seized by FBI agents during searches in Puerto Rico and Boston on Aug. 30, 1985, when 13 people were arrested. The government contends that Los Macheteros spent about $1 million, moved more than $2 million to Cuba and squirreled away $4 million in safety deposit boxes, certificates of deposit, savings accounts and farmhouse cellars in Puerto Rico.

Leonard Weinglass, Segarra's attorney, asserted during closing arguments that the robbery itself wa so unprofessional that it couldn't have been planned by a sophisticated, clandestine organization.

He noted that for his getaway, Gerena rented an old jalopy he couldn't rely on and it took him more than an hour to move the half-ton of cash from the Wells Fargo vault into his car's trunk.

If a sophisticated group had been involved, Weinglass said, other people would have been there to help.

Two other defendants — lawyer Paul S. Weinberg of Springfield, Mass. and Segarra's wife, Luz Berrios — pleaded guilty to reduced charges before the trial began Oct. 11. Nine others await trial while the government appeals the judges dismissal of some tape-recorded evidence.

Paul Audet, the Minutemen's number three singles player, began his match with an interesting score of 7-6, winning the tiebreaker 7-4. Somehow the cold wind steamed up his inner energy, as Audet took the second set and the match, 6-2. Playing number four singles was Rich Stone, winning 6-1, 6-4.

Humberto Soto played an incredible match at the number five slot. He was up 5-2 in the first set, on serve, and hit a bullet shot down the line to win the first set. Soto's second set was a repeat performance. Again up 5-2, he proceeded to win the next two points with two beautiful passing shot winners.

Soto's final score was 6-2, 6-2. Matt Murphy added another win to the Minutemen's score with a 6-3, 6-3 sixth singles match.

Because of the frigid weather the doubles teams played pro sets rather than play out two sets of tennis. First doubles, Gable and Johnson played great, winning in a 10-game pro set, 10-2. Audet and Stone, at number two doubles won 8-4 in an eight-game set and number three doubles, Sot and Murphy won 8-2.

mances were primarily dissappointing sixth-seventh-eighth, just out of the scoring column. Specifically, the hammer throw was a place of dissappointment, as the top UMass competitor was Tina White. She did qualify for New Englands with a toss of 121 feet, but she and along with Helen Balaouras (who seured the half point with a tie for fourth) and Diane Ozzolek, have been throwing 15-20 feet further in practice.

The meet in general was a disappointment, but granted, the competition was extremely tough. The loss was particularly hard on the throwers. LaFreniere said, "The throwers have been throwing much better in practice. They threw hard on Friday, but we're not expecting them to be superstars on Saturday. They just lost their technique."

To make it to the final, the Minutemen needed to get by the YAA Club from Philadelphia. It was a tight battle going into the fourth period with the two teams deadlocked at 8-8. But in the final quarter UMass "put the hammer down", as Yarworth put it and finished YAA off, 15-8.

That set up a title game between two of the strongest teams in New England, UMass and Brown. The Minutemen trailed by a close margin throughout most of the match and found themselves down 11-9 with a minute and a half left. But the Minutemen stormed back and with the score tied and the last seconds running off the clock, UMass goalie Pete Koback blocked a shot by Brown and quickly fired an outlet pass to Alex Yelensky. The UMass swimmer heaved a desperation shot the length of the pool with one second left which eluded the netminder for the Bruins and gave the Minutemen the trophy.

"It was a great ending," said Yarworth. "We played well."

Yarworth did see some areas for improvement though.

"We need to work on our team defense," he said. "We also have to learn to find the open man for the shots. I wasn't pleased with the way we played on Saturday, even though we won, but we really came around on Sunday."

The Minutemen will get some more chances to improve when they travel to the Naval Academy this weekend.

was able to hold its own with Army for much of the half, keeping the ball on Army's half of the field most of the time. Still UMass could only amass three points off a penalty kick by Paul Usher, who Laurence said "played a very good game." At the end of the first half UMass trailed 12-3.

As the second half started Army regrouped and soon realized how easily they could handle the UMass forwards. Army blew UMass off the ball no fewer than eight times in the second half and ran away with the game at that point.

Army is ranked by many as the second strongest team in the nation. And they are expected to do well in the nationals.

There was some good news from West Point this weekend. The UMass fourth side was able to beat Army's third side, 31-9 in a game that featured three tri's by Tony Tylman in what what only his second game. "He looked like he's been playing a long time," Laurence said.

Pat Brogan had another fine game for UMass. "He wasn't stylish or elegant, but it worked," Laurence said.

As for the game a North Adams, suffice to say that UMass lost and that it should not have happened. UMass will put the pieces together and get the team on the field at Springfield this Wednesday.

Esasky, Boggs help Sox trip Tribe in home opener

BOSTON (AP) — Nick Esasky homered in his Boston debut and Wade Boggs keyed rallies with a pair of singles yesterday as the Red Sox won their home opener, 5-2 over Cleveland.

Mike Boddicker, 1-0, blanked the Indians on two hits for five innings before giving way to Mike Smithson after a two-run homer by Joe Carter in the sixth. Smithson finished the game to pick up his second save.

The Red Sox, who returned home with a 1-4 record, spoiled the major league debut of Joe Skalski, who allowed three runs on six hits in five innings.

Cleveland, coming off a three-game sweep of the New York Yankees, pulled to within 3-2 on Carter's homer, which snapped Boddicker's scoreless string against the Indians at 16⅔ innings.

But Boston scored two runs in the bottom of the inning on Esasky's first American League homer and an RBI double by Marty Barrett.

Esasky, acquired from Cincinnati last December, also had a single in the fourth and a double in the seventh.

Boddicker, obtained from Baltimore last July, improved his Fenway Park record to 6-1 with the Red Sox. He is 10-2 lifetime in Boston.

The Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in the second when Dwight Evans doubled and scored on Rich Gedman's single.

Boggs singled to start the third. He took second when Barrett walked, moved to third on Andy Allanson's passed ball and scored on Ellis Burks' single. Jim Rice made it 3-0 with an RBI single after a pair of walks in the fifth.

Boggs cheered, Clemens razzed in home opener

BOSTON (AP) — The unofficial verdict from the Fenway crowd came without hesitation yesterday: You can cheat on your wife, but never, ever say anything bad about the hometown fans.

Boston Red Sox third baseman Wade Boggs, whose extramarital affair with Margo Adams has grabbed sports headlines since last June, got a resounding ovation from the packed Fenway Park crowd on opening day.

"It really meant the world to me," Boggs said after the game. "I've been waiting all winter for this day . . I didn't know what it was going to be like."

But when it came time to introduce ace pitcher Roger Clemens, the boos couldn't have been louder if a New York Yankee had walked on the field.

The reason was simple enough to those in the stands.

"Clemens dumped on the fans and Boggs didn't," said Ken Magrath, who was watching the action from an upper deck box seat. "You know what they say about Red Sox baseball: It's not life and death. It's more serious than that."

Neither player could possibly be drawing bad press for on-field performances in past years. Boggs has won five batting titles in six years and Clemens is a two-time Cy Young Award winner and 1986 MVP.

Clemens did not pitch yesterday, but Boggs had a pair of singles that helped fuel rallies in a 5-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Now, Boggs said he would like the team to get noticed for baseball.

"We just can't be dwelling on this thing all year," Boggs said, adding that his own reception helped relieve tension of off-season trade talk. "That's one of the reasons I don't want to leave here, because of the fans."

Clemens stepped into the off-season spotlight with some vague remarks about how unhappy he was in Boston, how the area did not afford the family atmosphere he valued in life and how he did not feel the team did enough to protect his family at the ballpark from rowdy fans.

Clemens has a policy of not talking to reporters unless he's pitching, and Manager Joe Morgan seemed unconcerned with the fans' reaction to his pitching ace.

"That's up to the fans," Morgan said. "All I know is they clapped for me."

To be sure, the Boggs saga was not entirely ignored by the assembled crowd.

Outside Fenway a pair of enterprising and unlicensed T-shirt salesmen were hawking shirts that referred back to his claim that an all-chicken diet helped him on the field.

The shirt bore the message: "356 lifetime avg. And you thought it was the chicken." They were selling fast at $5 a piece.

"We just came up with the idea sitting in the shop the other night," Jim Davis said as he doled out the shirts from a shopping cart.

Not all the fans were ready to forgive Boggs his trespasses.

"It's a sad commentary on the morality of our country," said John McCoy, who was attending his 35th consecutive opening day yesterday.

McCoy's friend, Chris Doherty, offered another explanation.

"Clemens basically offended and insulted a city, a group of people. Boggs hit more of a non-local group — he did it to women and women around the country," Doherty said.

A police officer escorting Gov. Michael Dukakis through the crowd had a theory perhaps closer to home — home plate, that is. The officer, who preferred to keep his name out of the papers, noted that Clemens has no wins in two starts prior to yesterday's home opener. Boggs, meanwhile, is batting .429.

Softball sweeps through A-10 weekend

Aprile tosses no-hitter; UMass dumps Bonnies, PSU

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The Minutewomen returned from their early season California tune-up a couple of weeks back with a 3-10 record, a tally which stood out against their claims of confidence and experience gained in getting beat by the best out west. The Minutewomen had played themselves into a hole. . .

But not a deep one. The Minutewomen stand this morning at 9-10, and the .500 plateau is only as far off as Thursday's contest against the University of Connecticut. UMass is also 4-0 in the Atlantic 10 after sweeping St. Bonaventure and Penn St. in a pair of doubleheaders this past weekend.

UMass handed the Bonnies (now 2-5) a pair of 10-0, 10-2 poundings, then scrapped past Penn St. to the tune of 1-0 and 4-0 on Sunday.

"These kids are a tough group," praised coach Elaine Sortino, "There were a lot of things that could have unsettled them, and they got the job done. We played great defensive softball."

The bats came around a bit as well. St. Bonaventure arrived on Saturday with a weak record and a short roster, and the Minutewomen met them with 24 hits on the way to stacking up their 20 runs. UMass hurlers, meanwhile allowed just two hits.

Freshman Holly Aprile threw a no-hitter in the opener, fanning five along the way (the game was called after seven innings thanks to the league's 10 run "say uncle" rule).

Aprile also jumped into the middle of things offensively in the third inning, leading off with a single before scoring on a two run single from Barbara Meehan. The Minutewomen went on to score seven runs in the frame, much more than Aprile would ever need.

In the second game of the afternoon UMass' Jen Devlin emerged with her second win of the season, though she struggled to throw strikes at times. In the top of the first, the Bonnies took advantage of a walk and a misplayed force at second to take an early 2-0 advantage.

Devlin cut the rally short with a pair of strikeouts, good for the second and third outs of the inning, with the bases loaded.

The Minutewomen rebounded in the bottom of the first, opening up with consecutive singles from Aprile, Cherie DellAnno and Alison Forman. All three eventually scored thanks to a series of defensive miscues, as the Minutewomen assumed a 3-2 lead they would never give back.

Against Penn St. the following day, the runs didn't come as easy. Penn St. is the defending Atlantic 10 champion, and still possesses talent enough to test the league's elite. They left town, however, with a 5-21 record.

Aprile battled Cathy Kaminski on the mound through nine scoreless innings. UMass rewarded her with the win by rallying in the bottom of the ninth to win the game. Devlin, batting for the injured Mary Duff, reached on a fielder's choice, and stole second base. Jenn Vaillancourt singled her fellow freshman home to win the game.

In the final contest of the weekend, Chris Wanner tossed a solid shutout, as her teammates cracked open a 1-0 duel with a three-run sixth inning, sealing the win. The rally centered around a run-scoring double from Vaillancourt.

Baseball team ready for rematch against UConn

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team faces only two non-conference teams more than once this season, and the second meeting with one of them, the University of Connecticut, will take place this afternoon.

The Minutemen, who are in the middle of a slew of non-conference games, head to Storrs, Conn. today for a 3:30 p.m. date with the Huskies.

For UMass, 9-10, this will be the fifth non-conference game in a row, and two were rained out last week. After today, it will play Boston University Wednesday and the University of New Hampshire Thursday before returning to Atlantic 10 competition this weekend with a series against the University of Rhode Island.

The Minutemen need to use the three games this week to tune up for the Rams. UMass went 2-2 last weekend, losing to Siena before winning two out of three games from New York Tech.

It's been two weeks since the Minutemen's first game with UConn, and in that game, freshman Sal Tinnerello ruined UMass' home opener with a ninth-inning homer to give the Huskies a 10-8 win.

Tinnerello is currently the second leading hitter for UConn with a .385 average, and leads the team in homers with five.

The Huskies, 12-10, are coming off a Big East series with St. John's. After winning the first game 7-1, UConn lost 11-2 and 4-2.

The pitcher the Minutemen may likely face today is senior righthander Jim Allen, who is 2-3 with a 3.86 earned run average.

With three saves, Tim Cain is UConn's top man out of the bullpen.

Extra innings: Brian Donovan, who didn't see action against N.Y. Tech, remains the Minutemen's leading hitter with a .429 average.

Drew Seccafico (.369) is second while Dave Edwards (.346) is third.

Seccafico also leads the team in runs batted in with 18, and freshman Brian Bright leads in home runs with five.

Women's track places a disappointing third

By RICK SETO
Collegian Correspondent

The new look of the University of Massachusetts women's outdoor track team did not impress, as the words that best describe the Minutewomen's lackluster effort this past weekend were "not competitive."

UMass finished a distant third with only 26.5 points, behind winner Cornell (81) and host Dartmouth (68.5).

The shining star was once again a familiar name – Lee Ann Ambrose, who picked up two first-places in the 200 and 400 meters. Her times of 25.92 and 58.01 respectively were good enough to qualify her for the New England Championships. Coach Julie Lafreniere said, "Lee just blew the competition away. Her 10 points were nearly half of the team's points."

Besides Simone Marisseau and Sue McFadyen, the other performances were simply 'not competitive.' Marisseau, a sophomore, finished third (two pts.) with a throw of 37-feet-11 in the shot. LaFreniere said, "She was the one who seemed to be able to concentrate and be more consistent with her throws in practice. Jim [Giroux] was very happy with her."

McFadyen, a freshman, scored three points with a third in the 100 dash and a fourth in the 400 hurdles. "Her time of 71.41 [in the hurdles] isn't bad for the amount of practice time," said LaFreniere.

Senior Carla DeSantis came up with her usual first-place finish but her New England qualifying throw of 128-feet-3 feet was not up to her usual high level of performance. The only other jave thrower, Nancy Laurie, finished third.

Precious Hill played the part of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde as she ran a good half-mile (second) but just totally took herself out of the 1500 early. Her slow start cost her a probable first-place finish, according to LaFreniere.

The throwers as a group did not impress Giroux, the assistant coach who is in charge of the throwers. The perfor-

Rugby team falls at Army

By DAN SARAZEN

The University of Massachusetts rugby team didn't fare well when it traveled to Army this weekend. It was a greatly disorganized team that showed up at West Point, and the proof was in the proverbial pudding.

After dealing with bad directions and a breakdown of their own, the first match got underway 20 minutes late. And the team that did go on the field was minus Eric Olsen, one of the team's most powerful props. Olsen's spot was filled by Dave Williams, who did a good job but was under continuous pressure.

The UMass ruggers began well, but being outweighed by as much as 20 pounds per man began to have its effect at the start of the second half. UMass coach Robert Laurence said they were "pounded and pounded."

The first half of the game went fairly well. UMass

Men's tennis sweeps past Rhody

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

Despite the freak blustery weather – snow squall included – the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team swept a 9-0 win over the University of Rhode Island yesterday at Boyden Courts.

Each player should be congratulated for their performances, considering the outdoor elements they were up against. The wind gusts were so strong at times that the nets bellied out because they lack the crucial center straps. The Minutemen showed their true athletic abilities in this match.

Brian Gable, the number one singles player, defeated Carl Briggs, 6-1, 6-1. Neither the winds nor a broken finger stopped Gable's flow on the court. His cross-court and down-the-line shots cut through the wind like a hot knife through butter.

At the number two position, Chris Johnson won his singles match against Sean Draunick, 6-1, 6-1. His incredible topspin shots ignored the wind. "In weather like this you just have to stay focused on the game. You can't lose concentration," Johnson said.

Water polo captures tourney crown

The University of Massachusetts men's waterpolo team showed just how much they are improving by winning the tournament they hosted last weekend in more than convincing fashion. The Minutemen swept all four games they played and beat regular season champion Brown University to take the title.

"I was pleased with the weekend," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "We played good polo."

UMass opened its tourney schedule against the Newport Waterpolo Club, out of Rhode Island, and won going away, 16-3. The next victim was also from the Ocean State, the Little Rhody Club, which fell 22-12.

Commuter elections marred by accusations

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Election officials said turnout for yesterday's Commuter Area Government elections was average, and, according to presidential candidates, so was evidence of negative and misleading campaigning.

Flyers accusing presidential candidates Robb Smith and Ted Chambers of stealing CAG funds, preventing the scheduled May 7 Union Program Council Pond Concert from taking place, are "blatant lies," according to several students.

"There's absolutely going to be a pond concert this spring – on May 7," said Ari Weinstein, production manager for the Union Program Council.

"[We] got no funding from the CAG," he said. "We never [had] it, so it's a moot point whether they allegedly stole any money as far as the pond concert is concerned. We fund the concert ourselves."

Numerous students, including Student Government Association Senators W. Greg Rothman and Brian Darling, and former SGA presidential candidate Josh Gordon, have been accused by Chambers and others of working on the production and placement of flyers.

Alex Zarganes, who along with Tim Reilly was running against Smith/Chambers, denied any involvement with the flyers, which were seen in numerous off-campus apartment complexes.

"It stinks because it's negative," Zarganes said, adding that he feels the people involved with the election realize his campaign has "nothing to do with [the flyers]."

Chambers said the reason the flyers – five different ones since last Thursday – were distributed directly relates to the March issue of The Liberator, a newspaper both he and Smith helped write.

Chambers said members of The Liberator have charges against three students, Rothman, Alan Brynolfsson and Doug Dratch, relating to an alleged assault against members of the newspaper. A show cause hearing on the four charges – assault, assault and battery, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and violation of civil rights – is scheduled for April 28 in Northampton District Court, Smith said.

"What can I say [about the flyers] except I'm not surprised," Chambers said. "These are the people who give the SGA a bad name."

Rothman said he thought it was "wonderful" the flyers were put up, and that he had "nothing to do with it."

He said Smith and Chambers were "getting what they deserved," after The Liberator wrote an "untrue" story about former SGA presidential candidate Guy Glodis. Rothman said the story, calling Glodis the "David Duke" of the University of Massachusetts, was as "much a lie as the [flyers]." Duke is a former Ku Klux Klan member who won a seat last month in the Louisiana legislature.

Darling refused to comment on whether he was involved with the flyers, but agreed with Rothman that "turnabout is fair play."

Gordon said he would not deny being involved in placing and/or producing the flyers.

Eric Nakajima, student trustee-elect and press agent for Smith/Chambers, said the entire series of events was "unfortunate, since students will be making a decision based on blatant lies."

Nakajima said he did not feel another election would take place, unless "you could link [a Zarganes/Reilly] victory with [the flyers]," a link he said would most likely not occur.

Reilly, Zarganes win

Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes defeated Robb Smith and Ted Chambers, 192-188, in yesterday's Commuter Area Government elections, according to Jennifer MacNeish, election coordinator.

Other results: Clarinda Rose-Turner defeated write-in candidate Corey Schuer for vice president, 211-82, while Steve Gardescue is the new treasurer, defeating write-in candidate Ashley Gauther, 191-45.

UMass to install cable TV and phone system

University gets wired

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Correspondent

Cable television will be available to University of Massachusetts students by the fall of 1990.

But that's not all.

In addition, an advanced phone system will be in place and student access to the main computer system will be a reality by the fall of 1990, according to Randy Salem, UMass telecommunications manager.

"UMass has been working for the past five years on a plan to bring in a phone system with features that other colleges already have," Salem said. "All residence halls needed to be rewired [for the new phone system], so it only made sense to include computers and cable as part of the telecommunications project."

Salem said the estimated $400,000 needed to complete the project will come from savings in the telecommunications trust fund, and the money saved from the new AT&T personal security code service begun this year.

There are several advantages to the new phone system, he said. It will not only allow students to have call-waiting, call-forwarding and conference calls, but the calls will be transferred over the wires at a much quicker rate, he said.

Another advantage to the new wiring system, he said, is that students will be able to make phone calls while they are

Beat poet Ginsberg 'Howls' in Ballroom

Allen Ginsberg

Allen Ginsberg rocked in his chair as he shouted recollections of his fellow patients at the Columbia Psychiatric Institute "who broke down crying in white gymnasiums, naked and trembling before the machinery of other skeletons, who bit detectives in the neck and shrieked with delight in police cars for committing no crime but their own wild pederasty and intoxication."

"Howl," which the 62-year-old poet wrote in 1956, was among the selections he read and sang in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom last night. The silent capacity audience of about 900 was occassionally moved to laughter as Ginsberg read from two anthologies of his poems.

Alongside Jack Kerouac's On The Road, "Howl" ushered in the bohemian literary movement of the 1950s. Known as the "Beat Generation," this movement gave rise to the massive counter-culture of the following decade.

The poet's deep voice and graying beard presented an image more in keeping with his tenured professorship at Brooklyn College while his poetry resounded of the radicalism he has advocated for three decades.

Parts of "Howl" were written under the influence of peyote, he said. In the 1950s, Ginsberg and Dr. Timothy Leary conducted the first experimental analysis of the mind-expanding effects of hallucinogens. Since then, the poet has advocated the legalization of these drugs in the United States along with the practice of transcendental meditation.

"While there are hundreds of millions

From this theory, Ginsberg composed the upbeat and lighthearted tune "Do The Meditation," which persuaded the listener to seek a higher plane of consciousness. He sang: "Let your breath out and open your eyes / Sit there steady and sit there wise / Follow your breath right out of your nose / Follow it out as far as it goes."

Among the other pieces he read were a eulogy to his mother, entitled "Kaddish," and "Whom Bomb," a chant which criticizes US foreign policy of the last 20 years.

In 1967, Ginsberg took part in the Human Be-In in San Francisco and was arrested while protesting the draft. At a press conference before the reading, he said right-wing movements of the 1980s do not arise from those movements.

Gay speaker asks gays to face up to challenges

By MEREDITH O'ERIEN
Collegian Staff

Gay men, lesbians and bisexuals face struggles in society, with their families, and with themselves, a member of the University of Massachusetts Gay and Lesbian Alumni Association said yesterday.

"Life begins after graduation," Rob Ranney said during his informal lecture to a crowd of five in the Campus Center, one in a series of events scheduled in celebration of UMass' sixth annual Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week.

"The closet is just so much damned work, I just couldn't stand it anymore," Ranney said. "It hurts. It's a heavy thing to carry. People respect the energy that it takes to be openly gay."

Having been married to a gay Black man for over four years, Ranney said he experienced difficulties with both homophobia and racism.

"There's always going to be trouble," he said. "There's always going to be racism and homophobia, but I'm not going to put it [the pressure] on myself anymore. Being interracial is harder than being gay."

He said his marriage to another man was featured in The Daily Hampshire Gazette. "We are challenging the sexist roles of 'who does the cooking.' Straight couples could learn from this because we ignore the sexism. We're starting from scratch," he said.

He said there are benefits to "coming out" to family members. "I came out to my stepmother when I was in college. It was tearful. We fought about it. I told her that I didn't choose to be gay, I just am. Then she told me that she still loved me."

"When you're not open to family, you get separated from your natural support system," Ranney said.

Because of the powerful impact of the AIDS epidemic, Ranney said it is essential for gays and lesbians to pull together as a family unit.

"People have started accepting people, reaching out because they don't have much time left," he said.

Ranney said it is important for gays and lesbians to participate in social and political organizations that facilitate strong and lasting relationships. "From just having gay friends, the networks happen," he said.

Cities were the best places Ranney said for gay or lesbian couples to settle in. "There are lots of great places [for gays and lesbians] to live," he said.

"[But] there are many little pockets like Amherst and Northampton, especially around colleges," he added.

Puerto Rican culture promoted

AHORA sponsors Puerto Rican Awareness Week

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Puerto Ricans at the University of Massachusetts feel they are misrepresented at UMass, several members of a campus Latino organization said.

"Hispanic concerns tend to get squashed by the greater concerns of the UMass community, other minority groups have concerns that are considered more important," said Felipe Barreda, an AHORA member.

The second annual Puerto Rican Awareness Week is slated for April 23 through April 28. The week will highlight Puerto Rican talent in the arts and emphasize the positve aspects of Puerto Rican culture, Barreda said.

"We're not only emphasizing campus talent, but also alumni talent," said Fraces Ramos, vice president of AHORA. "University talent past and present will be represented."

Organizers of the awareness week said they hope to "raise the level of awareness on the community as a whole" about Puerto Rican culture and unite Latin American students struggling to be heard on campus.

"It's essential for AHORA to promote the political and economic aspects of Puerto Ricans so English-speaking people and non-Latinos understand our culture," said Elliot Montevido, an AHORA member.

The Week is "an attempt to unite the whole Latino community and be heard at the highest levels of the administration on campus and by students," said Barreda. "Our concerns are placed on the back burner of the campus."

The Week was organized with the endorsement of the residential areas on campus, the chancellor's office, the Student Government Association and the Graduate Student Senate.

AHORA was established in 1974 in an effort to better represent Latinos on campus, according to Roberto Christian, founder of the Week. The organization has about 500 Latin American students, the majority of whom are Puerto Rican, Christian said.

Last year's Week brought over 2,500 people from UMass and surrounding areas, Barreda said, adding that AHORA hopes to reach more people this year.

Juveniles suspected of campus break-ins summoned to court

University of Massachusetts police have implicated two juveniles believed to be involved in at least 10 campus break-ins in recent weeks.

Lt. John O'Connor said the youths, whose names were not released, will be summoned to court as a result of a police investigation. He said police determined on Friday that the two were connected with recent car break-ins in Lot 34, and break-ins in the Young Stock Barn Office, the state-owned Farm Shop Barn, and the Grounds Shop.

Arthur Hilson, executive director of Public Safetey, said yesterday that catching the individuals will give police "a couple less cases to worry about." He said the investigation is ongoing and additional juvenile charges will be sought.

Some tricks they'll never learn.

If animals were responsible for their own birth control, there might not be a need to kill 14.5 million unwanted dogs and cats each year. That's the cost of not having your pet spayed or neutered. Fixed.

Even bringing a litter of puppies or kittens to an animal shelter is no guarantee they'll find a home before room has to be made for more.

Having your pet spayed or neutered is the only way to reduce the sad number of ownerless dogs and cats destroyed this year. And it will also increase your pet's chances of living a longer and healthier life. That responsibility is yours alone.

You'll never stop your pets from acting naturally. But if you love them, you'll have them fixed.

Student Funds . . .

Who has them? Who wants them? Who took them?

By PEDRO PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

Three and a half years ago, the University of Massachusetts administration, citing budget deficits and other fiscal problems, attempted to take control of the Student Activities Trust Fund.

The move ignited protests from student leaders and culminated in the arrests of four students during a demonstration at the Whitmore Administration Building on Dec. 5, 1985.

The students' indignation had roots in the nature of the $1.5 million trust fund, generated from student fees on semester bills. The students, whose will proved stronger than the administration for they still control the trust fund, felt they should control student funds.

Since then the University has gone through three sets of Student Government Association officers, and the relationship between students and administrators appears to have improved.

> What the administration attempted to do was to control the student's funds . . . Students have proved over the years that's not something they want.
> –Bob McDevitt

Some student leaders partly credit Student Activities Office Director Irene Carew, who took over the office last year, with the improved relationship. The office, which oversees the fiscal transactions of student groups, had the late Randy Donant as director until November, 1987.

Carew took over Donant's position, taking it upon herself to patch up the relationship. Her background in counseling services came in handy when she began to improve cooperation between her staff and a student leadership suspicious of administrators.

Donant, who died in August, had earned much criticism from the students, and, after the Nov. 19 takeover attempt, was asked to resign by the Undergraduate Student Senate, the SGA's legislative branch. His popularity hit its nadir when he and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson signed the memorandum informing students the administration would assume control of the trust fund.

"Randy [Donant] was more of an administrator," said SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins. Carew, she added, "is much more of an advocate for students."

Donant's absence and Madson's keeping out of controversial confrontations with the students has led to greater complacency among student leaders in regards to another possible attempt by the administration to control the trust fund.

Even occurrences of misuse of trust fund monies by student leaders, including the recent scandal involving former Commuter Area President Jay Festa, give many student leaders no reason to fear another takeover attempt.

But should students feel they have reason to fear?

"I don't think so," says Filkins, who shares the opinion with other student leaders such as Student Trustee Stefanie Orefice and student Sen. Holly Brod that the administration recognizes a few SGA members only, not all, are corrupt.

Public Policy Committee Chairman Michael Greiner says the threat is not as great now as in 1985, but he urges caution.

"It's always possible that [administrators] could take the [trust fund] away," he says. "It may be something that we haven't been concerned about enough lately."

Commuter Area Sen. W. Greg Rothman says he has no doubt another takeover attempt is possible because of recent scandals. "We're in grave danger of something like that happening," he says.

According to Carew, the students have nothing to fear. She says she has heard no talk of a takeover among administrators so far.

If anyone knew whether the adminstration were planning a takeover, Madson would, but he could not be reached.

Although students disagree on whether the administration is awaiting the first chance it gets to pull the reins of the trust fund from their hands, they agree on one point: the administration should stay away from the student-controlled portion of the trust fund.

"What the administration attempted to do was to control the students' funds," says Commuter Sen. Bob McDevitt. "Students have proved over the years that's not something they want."

Student leaders feel it's bad enough that the Student Activities Office claims about half the $2.2 million trust fund mostly for staff payroll. The trust fund grew from $1.5 million in 1986 when inflation-conscious student leaders, in cooperation with the University Board of Trustees, increased student fees from the annual $88 to $100.

Student leaders say the potential always exists for a student who has access to trust fund monies to misuse money. But the system provides enough checks and balances so that when corruption occurs it is quickly detected, they say.

Festa, who resigned from the Commuter Area president's seat last month, is one of the people whose apparent improprieties were detected. A report that Filkins prepared and presented to the senate shows that Festa spent about $1,500 in such questionable items as computer games, books, magazines and pills.

In addition, sources say that a $625 grant to the Massachusetts Free Press, a campus periodical, was used to fund the Liberator, a newspaper published last month containing attacks on campus conservatives that linked the conservative newspaper The Minuteman to Neo-Nazi groups.

The senate, reacting to outcries of corruption in the Commuter Area Government by McDevitt and conservative SGA members, charged Filkins with preparing the report.

Filkins also prepared reports on the other area governments, and is now compiling a report of financial transactions by the Sylvan and Greek residential areas. The SGA allocates close to $100,000 from the trust fund to the seven area governments.

Filkins has questioned certain expenses by the area governments, including large telephone bills and payrolls in the Central and Southwest residential areas.

Other occurrences of apparent improprieties include former Budgets Committee Chairman Nate Moore's running up extensive bills at Stop & Shop and his successor, Gil Penchina, buying unnecessary items for his office at the University Store and putting extra hours on his pay slips. Although the Moore affair has been kept mostly secret, which Orefice says is preferable to publicizing the scandals, the Penchina incident made headlines.

Penchina claimed he misused money because he wanted to prove how easy it is to do.

But Filkins maintains Penchina was able to do misuse money because his position as Budgets Committee chairman allowed him.

Other student leaders say blanket purchase orders, which some student groups use, allow for misuse of funds. Purchase orders are forms student groups use in local stores in place of cash. Some purchase orders are for a specific purchase, but blanket orders be used for various purchases until the limit of money is reached.

"I think our system is set up where abuse is very difficult on a grand scale," says Orefice, noting most corruption cases have involved small amounts.

Orefice and her colleagues note that no preventive measures can be taken against students who have access to the purchase orders. She says sometimes University Store clerks will not allow a questionable purchase, but this is rare.

Brod points out that everyone involved in the scandals has left student government. Festa, as well as Moore and Penchina, resigned after their apparent improprieties were uncovered.

"There's a sense that corruption is wrong, and corruption should be caught," says Brod.

McDevitt agrees. "No system is foolproof, but this is the best system," he says.

> There are some problems with ignorance . . . Any group with a large amount of money is a potential problem.
> –SAO Director Irene Carew

Student leaders say that although the scandals have caused little monetary damage, they have damaged the SGA's reputation. But, because the SGA comprises different factions, members of one faction police members of another, which in turn keeps the corruption to a minimum, says McDevitt.

Says Carew: "There's always been investigations by one student group against another student group." She adds that Filkins' findings "don't really come as a surprise, and that's unfortunate really."

She and some student leaders speculate that money is misused possibly more often than is known. Filkins says she has caught about two misuses per semester.

"There are some problems that are made out of ignorance," she says, adding that at least 600 students, including members of student groups other than the SGA and area governments, have access to purchase orders.

"Any group with a large amount of money is a potential problem," she notes.

hooked up to the main computer system, whereas in the past both operations required the same wires.

In spite of these advantages, Salemi said the students he has talked to seem to be more enthused about cable television.

"Most students say, 'Do we have to wait two years for it?'" he said.

Salem said a committee comprised of students, faculty and administration will decide what channels the students would most like to have, and that every dormitory room will be wired so that any student with a television can hook up to cable.

"The initial idea is to make this as inexpensive as possible [for students]," he said. "Everybody will get the same package."

Salem said all students will probably pay an added $5 to $10 per semester fee, regardless of whether they want the cable.

"The problem with direct fee services is that it is hard to keep track of who has TVs and who does not," he said. "Therefore, we want to provide the service to all students, and keep the price low."

Salem said cable television brings about several possibilities for UMass students and faculty, including broadcasts of lectures and classes by student organizations and professors, and student assistance in a possible cable station on campus.

UMass radio stations will benefit as well, he said, because stations previously shut down, such as Orchard Hill's WOCH, will be able to broadcast again over the new system.

Our international love affair

The United States and the Soviet Union have long maintained a secret love affair, but it wasn't until now (because the red giant is changing his ways) that either country admit it.

This Romeo-and-Juliet affair flourished at the end of World War II as a result of the official coldness with which the two countries opted to treat each other.

Pedro Pereira

Like the two rival families in the Shakespearean play, the governments of both countries failed to prevent their children — the people — from nurturing mutual admiration, which impelled them to seek information other than the official government view about each other.

The admiration is evidenced by the Soviet youth's craving for American and other Western countries' rock 'n roll and blue jeans. It is also evidenced by Americans' travelling to the USSR and craving for documentaries and books about the Soviets.

Jane and William Taubman, professors at Amherst College, spent six months in 1988 living in a Moscow apartment where they interacted with Soviet intellectuals and some blue-collar people. When the Taubmans returned last summer, they followed a friend's suggestion to write a book about the social, political and economic changes taking place in the Soviet Union because they felt Americans have an insatiable thirst for knowledge about the Soviets.

The Taubmans, as other scholars and journalists who have spent time in the Soviet Union, discovered that the Russians are just as curious about us as we are about them.

And, thanks to a short, round Soviet man who ascended to power in 1985, the curiosity has become easier to satisfy. President Mikhail Gorbachev's glasnost (political openness) policies have allowed the Soviet people to get a more candid look at the rest of the world and at themselves.

Glasnost has also benefitted the United States, for it has allowed us a more candid look at the Soviets. News, such as the Soviet nuclear submarine's sinking off the coast of Norway last week, would have been kept secret from the rest of the world in the past for as long as the Soviet elite could manage. But the accident made headlines almost immediately, which indicates the Soviets have come quite a long way since the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant spill in 1986.

Americans who feel the effects of glasnost have begun to alter their views about the Soviets, whom they looked upon as the "red menace" for about 40 years.

Jane Taubman pointed out that books about the Soviet Union published in the United States until recent times usually had red and black covers and often featured the sickle and the hammer. Now the covers, including that of the Taubmans' book Moscow Spring, have acquired the rainbow tones, she noted.

But the change of attitude by Americans toward the Soviet Union, once labeled by Ronald Reagan as the "Evil Empire," extends far beyond book covers, as evidenced by Reagan's signing the INF treaty with Gorbachev last year.

And, thanks to all the changes, the secret affair between both countries won't have to remain secret very long. This love story has the potential of ending up differently from Romeo's and Juliet's.

Short-sightedness hurts in the long run

Money has always been a powerful force within our realm of consciousness. No matter how truly free we believe we are, as long as we need money we're powerless.

School systems are no different. They need money to educate. Somewhere along the way people in many communities forgot about this.

Nancy Cohen

People want better education and teachers. We are just beginning to hear about illiteracy. It has now become the new disease among educators. When we find out that our children have the capability to graduate high school and not read a single word; we get angry. We blame the bureaucracy of the school systems and of course, the teachers.

It does appear easy to blame them. After all, isn't it their job to educate our kids?

So people get angry, yet when they have the opportunity to improve the system (because it is up to them), they don't want to spend the money. It's okay to lay off teachers; they're the ones who probably passed Johnny even if they knew he couldn't read.

What are we left with?

Just as many students and less teachers. Which means that teachers have larger classes. Which means the students become a number or a last name.

Teachers test the students, and if they pass all the tests, they pass onto the next grade-level.

Is this the way to deal with illiteracy?

After all, parents are complaining and are busy suing school systems for the very thing that they are inadvertently promoting.

Then there are the people who have no children, or who send them to a private school.

Why should they pay for someone else's kids education?

Maybe because those kids are a part of their community. They are the future, the community's future.

In the long run, these opposers of paying for schooling will have to deal with the very students they apparently didn't care about in the past.

We all live in communities and to attempt to alienate yourself from a large part of it makes no sense. Better students, better communities.

Does this make sense?

This society is based on the every man for himself attitude. Now I'm not saying everyone is like this, but that's the general feeling I get. We are also slaves for instant gratification. If it doesn't effect us now; why worry about it? Maybe it will eventually go away.

Sometimes I wish it could be that easy. Unfortunately, short sightedness has proven to be a failure for this country; economically as well as socially.

We have to think about our future, whether we're personally involved or not.

Education is like stocks and bonds. If you invest in it now, it could prove quite profitable in the future.

Teachers who don't answer to students

The Boston Globe ran a story on Friday, April 7 about two Medfield High School seniors who published the results of a teacher evaluation poll that they had conducted in an underground school newspaper called the Gravy.

According to the Globe, the paper caused quite a stir in the ranks of the Medfield faculty. Vice Principal John Moretti was quoted as saying that, "Reputations have been questioned," and that the publication of the poll "put an unnecessary strain on many of our faculty members." Some teachers are presently consulting attorneys as to the possibility of libel.

Robert Fesmire

Libel?! Since when is the publication of a public opinion poll considered libelous? I find it intriguing and maddening that so much controversy could be generated from two students exercising their First Ammendment rights. What Jesse Jacobs and Marcel Sarmiento did was hardly libelous. They asked 75 out of 475 students to rate their teachers using a 0 to 5 scale on ability, relationship with students, and fairness in grading. They reported the findings of the survey, dropping all zero scores because it "is unrealistic for a teacher to be an absolute zero."

There was no mention of any subjective interpretation of the poll or any other form of malice. But what irks me even more is the fact that administrators and teachers questioned the propriety of such a poll.

As a UMass student, I have the privilege of evaluating my courses and instructors at the end of every semester. Granted, some professors take these evaluations more seriously than others, but for the most part, I hope they carry some weight. The point is that we have an avenue for redress.

Why then, are high school students not given the same privilege? Are they too inexperienced or reactionary to be effective evaluators? I suppose during that summer before freshman year, some metamorphosis comes the student to make them more responsible. Or is the problem that school administrators and teachers are afraid there just might be some truth in that survey?

It is a common complaint that teachers suffer from an acute lack of accountability. Evaluations of instructors are limited to school officials, other teachers and perhaps parents. All too often we hear of competent teachers being axed while tenured dinosaurs are annually allowed to bore students into apathy.

While it is both unfortunate and disturbing that teachers do not receive as much attention as other officials, the fact remains that they are public servants. If a teacher has a particular problem which hinders his/her performance, or a skill which improves it, who is going to notice it first? The students. Who will be most strongly affected? The students. And yet, it is the students who lack the means for evaluating their instructors.

I applaud the efforts of Jacobs and Sarmiento. They found out what students thought. I hope more high school students follow their lead in trying to correct the problem of accountability. In the end, teachers and students alike stand to benefit.

An imperfect connection

Adam, Bob, Geoffrey, Jaryl, Jennifer, Lance, and Tammy — Who are the people we call our friends?

Well, let's see — our friends lend us the lecture notes when we miss a class or seven. They give us a lift when our car breaks down. They buy us liquor when we are underage. These are our convenience friends. We don't get too close to these friends or tell them too much. We'll talk about being overweight but not about being depressed. They know when we are pissed off but not blind with rage.

Scott Green

Then there are the special-interest friends, our basketball buddies, Tuesday-doubles friends, intramural yoga friends,our pro-choice pals. We meet to participate jointly in knocking a ball across a net or saving the world.

We also have friends who knew us "way back when"— when we got detention for writing nasty things on the blackboard, when we got caught drinking in the cemetary by the cops, when we lost our virginity, when (fill in the blanks). The years have gone by, you have gone your separate ways and have little in common, but still remain an intimate part of each other's past. And so whenever we go back to our hometown, we always go to visit this friend who knew us before our teeth were straightened, before we ate spinach, who knew us way back when.

What about the crossroads friends — when we roomed in Southwest together, were in ROTC together, went to camp together. Our crossroads friends are important for what was, for the friendship we shared at a crucial time of life. We feel a strong bond that is maintained with not much more than a once-a-year Christmas card. There is a special intimacy, dormant but always ready to be revived on rare occasions when we meet.

Close friends. These are the individuals to whom we reveal our innermost feelings and thoughts, wishes and fears, hopes and dreams. These are the friends who come when you call at two o'clock in the morning. We turn for reassurance, comfort, for come-and-save-me help, not to our family but to our intimate friends.

Close friends like us when we act grouchy and not just when we're nice. If we worry about spiders, they understand. When there is a booger hanging out of our nose, they tell us. When our hamster died, they were there. When we broke our wrist, we called them first. If we were kidnapped they'd find us, and if by chance they didn't, they could have our bottle cap collection.

We need our friends — all of our friends. There is no such thing as a perfect connection, when all I need is you, and all you need is me. People need people. This old proverb is in the plural for a reason. No two individuals can satisfy each other completely. Even if we are lucky enough to have one best friend, we learn they are, at best, an imperfect connection.

DISTINGUISHED LECTURE SERIES

Dr. Allen Newell

Carnegie-Mellon University

The Problems of Building Integrated Intelligent Systems

4:00 p.m., Thursday, April 13, 1989

102 Thompson Hall

Dr. Newell's work is held in the highest regard in the AI, computer science, and cognitive science communities, both for his pioneering research and his on-going studies. He was the first president of the American Association for Artificial Intelligence (AAAI) and is a current member of the National Academy of Sciences, the National Academy of Engineering, and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Newell will discuss his work on the Soar Project, an attempt to construct a computer system capable of a full range of intelligent action and able to interact with the external world. As he will explain, Soar is not only an architecture capable of many intelligent actions, but also a theory of human cognition -- the way in which Soar tackles its assigned tasks agrees with what is known about human behavior.

ARTS & LIVING

Jazz fest hits Horse

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

During the next several days, the Iron Horse in Northampton will host the biggest concentration of jazz talent wihin one week likely to take place this year - at least beflore this July's Bright Moments Fetival. The Horses "Spring Jazz Festival" features a remarkable diversity of musical styles, and every show is well-worth seeing. The space allotted to this column is nowhere near enough to do justice to all four artists.

Valley Jazz

Oregon the most famous, gives two shows tomorrow night. Unlfortunately these guys have been tagged with the "new age" and "world beat" labels. But make no mistake - Oregon's music goes far beyond the cliches of these genres. Their music has evolved considerablly during their existence of almost two decades; it has much depth and sophistication. All four members are virtuoso muksicians; guitarist/keyboardist Ralph Towner being perhaps the most spectacular. They do draw on the music of several world cultures, including American (jazz) and European (classical), as well as African and Asian, and their music is usually subtle and introspective, but they are innovators in a filed of imitators.

On Friday night, the Bill Barron Quartet provides an evening of mainstream traditional jazz. Tenor saxophonist Barron was an elder statesman of the Philadelphia scene in the 50's, thereby influencing such greats as John Coltrane, Jimmy Heath and Benny Golson. His relative lack of fame results from his desire to stay around Philly, and not from any lack of talent. Nevertheless, he has put in short stints with cecil Taylor, Donald Byrd and Charles Mingus. Currently he lives in the Hartford area. Joining him on piano is his better known brother Kenny who is currently a member of the Monk and Parker repertory group Sphere. Exxpect this quartet to expound on the bebop tradition with authority and grace.

More adventurous listeners will especially enjoy Saturday night's concert by The Fringe, a Boston-based trio who nopt only have an audacious name, but actually live up to it. The sax/bass/drums lineup is hazardous territory; Sonny Rollins claimed it and Henry Threadgill's Air tamed it. The Fringe, featuring monster saxist George Garzone, explore it too, and I do mean explore. they are near-legends on the Boston club scene. Raw, gutay stuff!

No "jazz festival" would be complete without a contribution from Latin Jazz. The Afro-Latin connection was first established by Dizzy Gillespie, when he collaborated with Cuban Congero Chano Pozo in the 1940's, and its a vital, often overlooked aspect of jazz. Accordingly the Iron Horse's mini-festival concludes next Tuesday night with congero Pancho Sanchez and his eight-piece Latin Band. Sanchez' infectuous music combines equal parts Salsa and jazz; his conga drumming is fiery. He and his band have been known to cover such Latin Jazz classics as Dizzy's "Manteca." Those of you who saw Tito Puentes's excellent show at the FAC last year should know what to expect.

Oregon, who will be playing two shows on April 13 as part of the April Jazz Fest at the Iron Horse.

The Iron Horse should make this Spring Jazz Festival an annual tradition. Four shows in one week, and I repeat all are well worth seeing. They have managed to bring together four bands whose general stylistic areas cover much of what is great about jazz and none of what isn't. In other words, this festival is a welcome antithesis to the pathetic state of "jazz festivals" (e.g. Newport) today.

Discovering the art of the computer age

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian staff

If you thought Earthfoods Cafe was nothing more than alfalfa sprouts and tofu, then you are sadly mistaken. Earthfoods is also an art gallery.

From April 6th through April 14th, the graphic works of Thea Kearney will be displayed at Earthfoods. Kearney is a senior art major at the University of Massachusetts with a concentration in computer graphics.

"I got into computers by chance," Kearney said. "It seems that almost everything has been done in painting. It's hard to come up with something new. And although new isn't always necessarily good, it seems to be really important in the art world. With computers, it's easier to come up with something new. It's easier to change and experiment with your work. There's a lot more freedom."

Three of Kearney's works on display deal with eyes. "I have an obsession with eyes," she said. "They're interesting. There's so many hidden messages in them. They're the center of things, how people deal with each other. They're mysterious and scary at the same time.'

The rest of Kearney's works on display were originally done in pen and ink, then transferred to the computer. The works demonstrate a surrealistic approach in the Jean Miro vein. "The whole surrealist thing really appeals to me," Kearney said. "It helps to make things clearer in my mind. If you think about it, your mind's being bombarded - through MTV, newspaper ads, billboards - with messages all the time. This is my way of sorting it all out."

All of Kearney's works have a red, white, and blue color scheme. She explains that this is for two reasons. "The works are very confusing, so I didn't want too many combinations in color," she said. "Also, the images are very American in a lot of ways. Messages and ads are very American."

Computer graphics is a new major at UMass, but Kearney thinks that it has already come a long way. She said, "They're really trying and there's a lot of good teachers, but it's still new and there's a lot of kinks to iron out. But in the last three years, there's been a lot of improvements."

Kearney also works with video and music in some of her other computer art. Some of this will be displayed in the Fine Arts Center in May along with the works of two other computer graphic artists. You may want to check out what promises to be the art of the future.

Sensitive Stephenson blows away Flowers hot air

By BOYD HILTON
Collegian Correspondent

Martin Stephenson/Hothouse Flowers
S.U.B.

Last Thursday's concert at the S.U.B varied wildly in mood from the utterly sensitive strummings of Martin Stephenson to the pomposity of a seemingly endless Hothouse Flowers drum-solo. Having witnessed many a joyous performance by the former (with his band The Daintees) back in Our Native Land and having glimpsed the odd video by the latter, the very decision to have Stephenson backing up the Flowers seemed perverse. However Stephenson told me before the show that the Flowers had requested his support after meeting him at a club in Ireland. Realising that they were "nice blokes" our Martin decided to grace their U.S. tour with his presence, which is fair enough. And grace he did . . .

Bathed in blue, alone with his guitar and his hat, in 45 minutes Stephenson took us through a greater variety of styles and moods than the massed ranks of the Hothouse Flowers managed in nearly 2 hours. Much of the audience, kitted up in black leather, seemed rather bemused by this lone figure oozing a quiet intelligence during his slow songs, and then sparking with spirit in songs like "Nancy" and "Running Water".

Stephenson is not concerned with the showbiz pomp of Rock'n'Roll. he is a normal, quiet kind of guy who sings songs about the things that affect normal, quiet kind of people. He explained that he bases his songs on matters of "the self, Family and Community" and in keeping to this personal realm he avoids cliche as completely as the Hot house Flowers avoid subtlety.

This guy may stand on stage singing solo with an acoustic guitar, but, he is at pains to point out, he does not wish to be merely the latest in a long line of worthy "protest singers" plunging politics into pop with a sledgehammer. Stephenson knows that politics is right there, deep in the Self, deep in the Family and deepest in the Community.

The awareness is clear from a song like "Wholly Humble Heart," about a gay friend whose loneliness is bound up in society's treatment of homosexuality. When released as a single in Britain, Stephenson wrote a protest on the cover against Thatcher's obscene crackdown on the "promotion" of homosexuality by Local Authorities. Stephenson spoke out when it was important. And he sang out as he played, showing that he meant every word.

Martin Stephenson's manager told me that his American record-company are marketing him in the "alternative" bracket along with Skinny Puppy. Well, Stephenson is not alternative in the Skinny puppy sense of the word. His honesty, rawness and wit are the alternative to the reactionary dross that passes for being alternative on U.S college radio stations.

When Stephenson walked off to the shouting and screamning of the Scottish and Welsh contingent, it was time for the leather-clad Bono lokalikes to have their fun. And everyone seemed to be verging on having an orgasm when the final crash of the drum-solo eventually came along. I was pondering the difference in calibre between this semester' two Irish bands. That Petrol Emotion were full of Irish fervour, a dark and powerful Guinness. Hothouse Flowers are your average generic rock band, more like your average generic American beer - a Budweiser or maybe even a Bud Light. I went home, the champagne of Martin Stephenson still bubbling within me.

Big Italian dining at small area restaurant

By TRACY CEURVELS

Cafe DiCarlo
Amherst

Tucked away underneath the Crabtree and Evelyn store at 71 North Pleasant St. in Amherst is a small, casual yet pleasant restaurant. Many of you may have walked right past, not even aware of its presence. Next time you're strolling through town, looking for somewhere to eat, try Cafe DiCarlo. It's just a few steps down the ramp to the front door.

Cafe Dicarlo opened its doors just about seven months ago when the owners transformed their former restaurant, a pizza parlor called the Upper Crust, into a truly elegant, authentic Italian restaurant, with a wide variety of exquisite dishes.

Your dining experience here will most definitely be a pleasurable one. The atmosphere is very comfortable, with soft music playing in the background, local art work decorating the walls, and a very new, very clean interior.

The food is wonderful, but I must point out that many of the items on the menu are highly seasoned with garlic.

Cafe DiCarlo is a little on the expensive side, but comparable with any restaurant of this calibre, and is definitely worth the money. Appetizers range in price from $2.25 for garlic bread to $8.00 for antipasto. Also available are calimari stuffed with shrimp and cheeses served with sun-dried tomato and black olive sauce for $7.00. There are Caesar salads for $6.25, and many other delicious items.

Entrees range in price from $7.50 for aglio olio e pepperoncichi, which is past sauteed with fresh garlic, virgin olive oil and pepperoncini, to $21.00 for the Sicilian Connection, which consists of jumbo shrimp and scallops in a lemon garlic cream sauce served with filet mignon. Many pasta, lasagna, chicken, duck, veal and seafood dishes are also available. There is a lot to choose from on this menu so be prepared to read it over a few times.

The waitress took our drink order and then brought over fresh, warm rolls along with a regular and an herb butter which was especially tasty. Cafe DiCarlo offers an extensive wine list but does not have a bar. Sodas and Orangina are also availble, but no juice.

DINING OUT

The waitress told us about the daily specials. One problem with the menu was that everything sounded so delicious that I couldn't decide what to order. I opted for the specials, veal cooked with feta cheese and sun-dried tomatoes for $14.50. I also sampled the rack of lamb which sells for $15.75.

Both entrees came with salads, which could be topped with such unique, tasty dressings as gorgonola or tomato basil vinaigrette. One thing that I thought to be strange was that the rack of lamb came with two side orders of vegetables while the veal special came by itself. I thin it, too, should have come with vegetables because it was a bit boring by itself, but delicious nonetheless.

After dinner we enjoyed desserts which were a bit expensive at $3.50. For you sweet tooth's, the riccotta cheesecake and the amaretto mousse pie were both outstanding.

Cafe Dicarlo is open daily for lunch and dinner. You should definitely stop by before the end of the semester to enjoy a wonderful meal.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A friend's or partner's unpredictable behavior will keep you on your toes. Joining a health club is a good idea only if you will use it regularly. Otherwise, work out at home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You have abundant energy now. Lay the groundwork for future success. Travel could lead to more exciting romance. Curb emotional outbursts or family ties will suffer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your past could come back to haunt you. Be fully aware of the possible consequences before signing a contract. A parent may need more of your time. Be a good listener.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A heart-to-heart talk proves very satisfying. Extra cash will make certain decisions easier. Students enjoy a remarkably good day. Try to put a personal touch on your work. Creative ideas abound!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Not a favorable day for an argument with your boss or landlord. You will not win. Be patient. Time will help turn things around for you. Pay attention to your innermost feelings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Imagination, love and joy will keep you in high gear today. Creative projects help you return to your old self. You may be in a holding pattern where cash flow is concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You will have to arrange a compromise if you hope to end an impasse and move on. Your involvement with a dominant individual could work against you. Chart an independent course.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Be more willing to work with people who do not necessarily share your ideas. You will profit handsomely from a deal you make before noon. A close relationship is deeply satisfying now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Something that happens provides a welcome emotional release. Economic trends favor what you want to do. New employment doors swing open. You are in the right place at the right time. Celebrate quietly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Listen to someone who really knows the business. A hobby could become profitable. Obtain up-to-date information before reaching a final decision. Travel lifts your spirits. You see the past with new eyes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) A fast-paced day lies ahead. Vigorous physical activities leave you tired but filled with excitement. Satisfy a whim. Try to avoid a battle of will with someone; suggest intelligent compromises.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) A long friendship could turn into a marriage. Companionship is your main goal today. Consider the financial repercussions of making a drastic move. It might be better to stay put for now.

Bring on Montreal: Bruins eliminate Sabres, 4-1

BOSTON (AP) — Randy Burridge broke a scoreless tie with a shorthanded goal in the second period as the Boston Bruins wrapped up their Stanley Cup playoff series with a 4-1 victory over the Buffalo Sabres last night.

In winning the first-round Adams Division series 4-1, the Bruins earned a berth in the division finals starting Monday night in Montreal. The Canadiens clinched their series Sunday night with a four-game sweep of Hartford.

Burridge's third goal of the series at 8:39 launched a three-goal spurt in five minutes. Ray Neufeld scored at 11:26 and Cam Neely added a power-play goal at 13:04. Craig Janney got Boston's final goal with 5:28 left in the game.

Grant Ledyard broke goalie Andy Moog's bid for his first shutout in 47 NHL career playoff games at 5:23 of the third period on a 40-footer after Buffalo's John Tucker won the faceoff.

The Bruins were 0-7-1 against Montreal during the regular season. But they were 0-6-3 against Buffalo after losing the series opener. Then they won four games in six days. The Sabres lost their fifth consecutive series since last surviving the first round in 1983.

Boston, 4-0 in playoff series against the Sabres, beat them 4-2 in last year's opening round. Then the Bruins beat Montreal 4-1 after dropping the opener and New Jersey 4-3. In the Stanley Cup finals they lost to Edmonton 4-0.

Burridge began the scoring for the third straight game last night. In his previous 30 playoff contests, he managed just three goals.

Glen Wesley had the puck along the left boards in Boston's zone and fired it across the ice to the streaking Burridge, who collected it behind the defense as he crossed the red line. He skated in alone and fired a low 10-footer from the slot that went by goalie Jacques Cloutier's left side.

Bobby Carpenter set up the second goal with a pass from deep in the right corner of Buffalo's zone. Neufeld got it at the top of the right circle and slapped it by Cloutier's right.

Neely, who had the game-winning goals in Boston's two weekend victories at Buffalo, made the score 3-0 at 13:04. Janney carried the puck from behind the Sabres' net and shoved it into the slot to Neely. He fanned on the backhand attempt, but the puck slid to his forehand and he scored as he was being knocked down.

besting his total of 29 from last year. With his nose for finding the open man from his perch behind the goal, the UM record of 60 assists by Charles Hardy (1972) is not a far-fetched idea.

Junior midfielder Tim Soudan, predicted by UMass coach Dick Garber to be a premier player for the Gorillas this year, has lived up to the billing. His 17 goals and five assists top his 13-4 totals from last season, and his physical presence and flashing moves have made opponents weary.

Junior Rob Codignotto, the fourth attackman in a three-attack offense, hasn't let that bother him, already scoring 11 goals and five assists, far ahead of last year's 8-1-9.

But the biggest jump has been by senior attack Paul Ganci. A transfer from Nassau Community College, Ganci is in just his second year with the Gorillas. He had modest totals of 7-9-16 last season, but has exploded this year with a team-high 21 goals, along with 16 assists. Guess that junior college trend doesn't only apply to basketball, does it.

The Aftershock of the Week award goes to Brown's senior attack Jamie Munro. During last week's 15-6 loss to the Gorillas at Boyden, Munro became the adopted whipping boy of the Hill faithful after blowing an open net goal in the first half. He had a hat trick at that point, but subsequently crawled into the Grand Canyon and didn't score again.

It seems no one bothered to throw poor Jamie a life preserver. In an 8-7 overtime loss to Adelphi Saturday, Munro pulled an oh-fer, getting no goals or assists. It's possible he was still seeing constellations after getting his toilet flushed by a vicious Soudan check in the fourth quarter.

From the This has nothing to do with UMass, but I thought it was interesting anyway Dept.: Hofstra has a freshman who is aptly named — Mike Lacrosse. Guess it wouldn't be right if he played, say, shuffleboard. He was the Eastern Collegiate Conference player-of-the-week recently. And no, he isn't from Lacrosse, Wisc.

Tinnerello owns Minutemen in 11-0 blowout

Derek Dana and the Minutemen dropped an 11-0 decision at Connecticut yesterday afternoon.

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Conn. — If University of Connecticut freshman Sal Tinnerello had one wish, he probably wouldn't use it for a new car, or even to turn 21 a couple of years early.

Tinnerello might very well use his one wish to ask for another game with the University of Massachusetts baseball team this season. Quite simply, he has owned the Minutemen this year.

Yesterday at J.O. Christian Field, Tinnerello went 5-for-5 and drove in five runs to lead the Huskies to an 11-0 pounding of UMass.

The win gives UConn a sweep of the two-game season series and drops the Minutemen to 9-11 on the season.

"We're just trying to be consistent," Tinnerello said. "I've played pretty well against UMass, but I think it's just coincidence."

Possibly, but not likely. Tinnerello's single, three doubles and home run yesterday gave him some impressive season totals against UMass: 8-for-10 with six extra base hits, including three homers.

The Minutemen can concentrate on today's game with Boston University (3 p.m., Lorden Field) knowing that Tinnerello is more than two hours away, helping his team against the University of Rhode Island.

"I can't explain why I'm so hot right now," Tinnerello said. "I've just been seeing good pitches and I feel good at the plate."

But Tinnerello didn't supply all the UConn offense yesterday. The Huskies, 13-10, knocked four UMass pitchers around for 16 hits.

"After our top four pitchers, you never know what's going to happen." UMass coach Mike Stone said. "The pitching wasn't good today and no one helped them out."

Starter Bill Vickers lasted five innings for the Minutemen and gave up five runs. Only one of the runs was earned, though, and it came on a bizarre play.

With one out in the bottom of the second and UConn's Craig MacDonald on second, Tim Cain sent a fly ball deep to center. Brian Bright made a nice catch near the fence but fell, and McDonald scored all the way from second to give the Huskies a 1-0 lead.

In the fifth, two physical errors and one mental error allowed UConn to add four unearned runs, three on a Tinnerello homer, and by the time Vickers left, the Minutemen trailed 5-0.

Rich Graham, Rob Graziano and Doug Dubiel each pitched an inning to finish the game for UMass.

The Huskies, on the other hand, got a complete game from Pete Walker. The righty gave up just five hits, struck out six and walked four.

In the first meeting between the teams, Walker pitched 3 and 1/3 innings of relief and allowed only a solo homer to Bright.

"Walker did a real good job last time against UMass," UConn coach Andy Baylock said. "Actually he's pitched well for us every time out this year."

And his teammates, led by Tinnerello, made sure he had a cushion to work with.

"We have some holes and they were seriously exploited," Stone said. "I thought we had better talent than this."

Gorillas rise to 13th in poll

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has climbed one spot to 13th in the latest United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll.

Apparently those in the know still are unimpressed with the level of competition the Gorillas (6-1, but the New Hampshire win was too late for consideration) have faced thus far this season. There are no less than six teams ranked ahead of them that have already lost at least two games.

Of course, the poll has never been too scientific anyway. UMass was ranked fifth by the poll in preseason, and then the first week of the season had dropped out because it had not played any games to date. Question is, how can a team see its preseason stock dropped that far just because it hasn't played yet?

If the season were to end today, the Gorillas wouldn't even be guaranteed of making the NCAA playoffs. Only 12 teams get in from Division I, including the top 11 teams in the land along with an automatic bid from the "West." This will assure that some team like Sonoma State will be rubbing elbows with the big boys come the middle of next month while more deserving teams will be out in the cold.

But UMass will have plenty of chances to make an upward climb. Yale, the team's next opponent (Saturday in New Haven, Conn.) is ranked ninth with a 6-2 record. No. 7 Harvard (5-1) comes up April 26 in Cambridge, and No. 2 Syracuse (6-1, with only a one-goal loss to top-ranked Johns Hopkins) invades the Stadium May 6.

After Hopkins and Syracuse are Loyola, Maryland and Navy in the top five, followed by North Carolina, Harvard, Penn, Yale and Cornell in the top 10. Towson State, Hofstra, UMass, Adelphi and Virginia round out the poll.

It may still be reasonably early, but several Gorillas have already passed last year's point totals.

Sophomore attack Jim McAleavey picked up three assists (and a 15-round split decision after being pushed into the net) in the team's 16-8 win over New Hampshire Sunday. This gives him 31 for the season, already

Women's lax to see Crimson today

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Patti Bossio is not waiting for any approvals from the Amherst Zoning Board Commission.

She'll set up shop on Totman Field today (3 p.m.) with a new look defense in an attempt to trap Harvard University.

It may be hard to start from scratch seven games into the season but in the midst of a 1-5 year Bossio needs to find a remedy for her struggling Gazelles.

Now, here's a little basketball lingo. UMass will employ a 3-1-2-2-1 zone on the Crimson. Bossio calls it an eight-meter fan.

The Gazelles had been matching up man to man for the first five games. However, four losses in a row prompted Bossio to make some major changes.

She started by implementing this zone Sunday in a game against Colgate University. Things started out a little shaky in the first half as UMass fell behind 7-4. But the Gazelles only needed one half to get accustomed to the new game plan and limited the Red Raiders to three goals in the second half.

The new strategy has also benefitted the attack.

"I think one of the reasons why we weren't scoring a lot is because our best shooters were running around, exhausting themselves on defense," Bossio said. "When they got the ball and took the shot, they were just so tired that they couldn't take a real good shot."

"This way, with a zone, I think we save them a little bit. Cathy Fuhrman's not running all over the field. She's in one spot and she's able to get out quickly on the breakout."

Every defense does have its weaknesses though. In lacrosse, there's a rule called obstructing free space to the goal. No player's body or stick can be in the free space at the eight meter mark when the opponent is attempting a shot. Violation will result in a free position shot. That call hurt the Gazelles on Sunday.

"It's a crucial call because you give up a free shot on goal," Bossio said. "If a team can work the ball around the zone quick enough, they can get that shooting space call. That is something we just worked on now to iron out."

Harvard may be the toughest club that the Gazelles have run into this season. The Crimson are 4-0, ranked No. 1 in New England, and are on a mission after getting knocked out of the semi-finals at the NCAA's Final Four by Temple University last year.

Most of the defense from last year's squad is still intact for the Crimson but the good news for UMass is that the Ivy Leaguers are only averaging just over nine goals a game. Most of their scoring comes from the midfield and defense where Karen Everling is the leading scorer with six goals and three assists. Bossio said that she wants to keep the score under double digits and slow the tempo on the offensive end.

"We're not fast enough man to man and Harvard is just blowing everybody away," Bossio said. "We have to minimize the shots taken on Liz (sophomore goaltender Liz Keats)."

"If we have the fast break, great," Bossio said. "If not, let's run our offense and keep running it and running it and take time off the clock. Wednesday against Harvard, I just want to hold on to the ball."

University of Massachusetts students reacted with indignation yesterday to the prospect of a $108 rise in tution for next fall.

"I don't think I'll be coming here next semester," said sophomore Judy Dorato. "I can't afford it."

Under the plan, recommended Tuesday to the Board of Regents by board Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer, tuition at the Amherst and Boston campuses would rise from $1,404 to $1,512. The board will vote on the proposal during its May 9 meeting.

Regents spokesman Terry Zoulas said an increase at the Amherst campus would be subtracted from the $230 emergency curriculum fee approved by the UMass Trustees last week, in effect, nullifying the hike. "My understanding is that [the fee] is going to be reduced dollar for dollar for the tuition increase. So in effect, it won't make any difference for [the Amherst campus]," he said.

But Paul Page, vice chancellor for administration and finance, said yesterday the University "has made not overtures" to absorb a tuition hike with the curriculum fee.

"That's not to say that won't happen," Page said. "But we'll just have to wait and see what the budget is. Any discussion right now is just premature." Page added that Zoulas' suggestion of a dollar for dollar absorbtion "is the first I've heard of that."

Jennifer Matusiewicz, a first year student, said of the proposal: "Not again! I'm very angry about that. There are so many extra little bills — these fees are just incredible. It seems every semester they're pushing the cost up."

Junior Doug Miller said, "It's going to make things more difficult for me. There are a lot of people where every increase makes the difference between whether they come back next semester."

Zoulas said those students in tight spots will be helped through less stringent financial aid guidelines regarding the family contribution towards tuition.

Under the present guidelines if the family contribution is determined to be greater than $3,000, no state financial aid is available to the student. Under the new guidelines, that cut-off point will be upped to $3,500 enabling 1,400 more students to qualify for assistance, Zoulas said.

Survey: Less drinking, more tripping

By REID YOSHIDA
Collegian Correspondent

Undergraduates at the University of Massachusetts claim to be less "drunk" and more "tripped" than in previous years, according to a survey conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office.

The 1988 SAREO survey, which asked 280 randomly selected undergraduates numerous questions on alcohol and drug use, showed that drunk driving and alcohol intoxication has slightly decreased, while hallucinogen use has nearly doubled from 1986 figures.

"Students are a lot more conscious and aware about drinking too much and getting behind the wheel," said David Kraft, executive director of the University Health Services.

Kraft said his department is more concerned with alcohol abuse and has stepped up the amount of alcohol awareness programs to educate students on alcohol and its effects.

"As far as hallucinogens go, that [statistic] may be a variation," he said. "Use patterns change over the years, but [a hallucinogen] is a risky drug."

The survey reported that 49.5 percent of UMass undergraduates have used marijuana at least once in the past year. That figure is about the same as in 1986, while cocaine use is nearly half of what it was in 1986, the survey said.

In another recent survey, UMass sociology professor Anthony Harris found that female students have decreased their cocaine use and drunk driving, while male students have increased in both areas.

"Females seem to be more deterred by the negative publicity surrounding drug use in general," Harris said.

While alcohol use on campus has decreased, UMass police statistics show that the number of alcohol-related arrests has steadily increased in the past two years.

Police records show that in 1986 there were 282 alcohol-related arrests at UMass, compared with 373 arrests in 1988.

"Many calls are from students wanting us to assist them in helping control other drunk students," said John Luippold, deputy chief of Public Safety.

"I think students are making a big difference and have a real desire to help make UMass a flagship school," he said.

Most students, however, see no difference in the amount of alcohol or drug use. "It's not seen as much now," senior Linda Dalton said. "When I came here in '84, if you were legal you could drink on campus. Now you can't even drink in the halls with a Coke bottle."

Julie Elkins, residence director in John Adams Tower, said students have not changed their drinking habits, but alcohol and drug use is not as visible as before, because of new programs and stiffer penalties administered by police and school officials.

CAG election losers plan to protest

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Infuriated by what they call a defeat "caused by negative campaigning and blatant lies," presidential candidates Ted Chambers and Robb Smith plan to formally protest Tuesday's Commuter Area Government election today, Chambers said last night.

"We estimate more negative campaigning was done than positive campaigning," Chambers said. "There were literally thousands and thousands of posters that said that there wasn't going to be a spring concert because Robb and I stole funds."

Chambers and Smith were defeated by Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes by four votes, 192-188, in the election. According to election coordinator Jennifer MacNeish, it is "very possible" the victory was caused by the onslaught of misleading posters, taped up in several off-campus apartment complexes.

"I think it's very possible," she said. "People were talking about the completely fabricated information at the ballot boxes. I feel it may have swung the election by the four votes."

MacNeish, who said she had not talked to either set of candidates since the election results were announced, said she wants to sit with both parties and members of governmental affairs to "get everyone's opinion before making a decision."

She said that it was difficult to say at this point whether another election would occur, although that is possible.

"I wasn't really happy with the way the election went," she said.

Former champ dies at 63

CULVER CITY, Calif. (AP) — Sugar Ray Robinson, a five-time middleweight champion considered by many boxing experts to be the greatest pound-for-pound fighter ever, died Wednesday at Brotman Medical Center. He was 63.

"It appears to be of natural causes," said Los Angeles County coroner's spokesman Bob Dambacher. The coroner's office was involved because it had been some time since Robinson had seen his doctor, Dambacher said.

Robinson, born Walker Smith in Detroit, won the welter-weight title in 1946. He went on to win the middleweight title an unprecendented five times from 1951, when he knocked out Jake LaMotta, to 1958 when he beat Carmen Basilio.

He lost only 19 of his 202 professional fights.

Judy Davis, a spokeswoman for the hospital, said Robinson was brought to the emergency room by paramedics at 9:55 a.m., accompanied by his wife, Millie. He was pronounced dead at 10:09 a.m., Dambacher said.

Ms. Davis declined to described Robinson's symptoms.

"We will be investigating the circumstances surrounding his demise and taking care of the cause and manner of death," Damdacher said.

"It does not appear at this time there will be an autopsy. We will know more tomorrow.

In Las Vegas, boxing promoter bob Arum said Robinson had been in poor health for some time.

Burgers — not lobsters for Central

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

This year's Central Spring Fling will be all turf and no surf. The Undergraduate Senate last night rejected a plea by the Central Area Government for a $3,500 transfer so it could serve lobster at its annual celebration. Instead, the senate awarded the area $950 for hamburgers, hotdogs, condiments, charcoal, ice and soda.

The event, one-day festival for Central area residents, has been held as a clambake in the past, offering lobsters and other seafood for a feast.

The money CAG requested belongs to Central residents but is regulated by the senate through the Student Activities Trust Fund. Student Government Association Treasurer Laura Filkins said a slight deficit in Central's revenue account, resulting from poor programming during the year, changed the menu to barbecue fare.

Several senators charged Central Area President Stewart Fife, who did not attend the meeting, with causing the deficit by neglecting his programming duties and opposed the transfer claiming it is unfair to other area governments.

"It was an exorbitant amount," said Sen. Todd Lever. "They were supposed to program during the year.

Fife could not be reached for comment last night.

Filkins, who opposed the transfer calling it a "shortcut," said area governments are supposed to use their SATF-allocated funds to hold programs, such as movie nights or other activities, and then deposit profits from these events into the revenue account.

"I don't think they did the amount of programs they should have," she said. "I think $950 is plenty."

Sen. John Silveria, who petitioned the senate in place of Fife, attempted to shave $2,000 off the original request but this refined proposal also met opposition on the senate floor.

Several people claimed the entire proposal waived the Student Government Association by-laws, which normally prohibit such transactions to insure that governments will provide programming for their residents.

"You don't need $1,500 for a one-day event," said Stephanie Orefice, student trustee. "In reality, we shouldn't be giving them anything because we're waiving our by-laws."

"It's the students' money and it's their decision to have this food," Silveria said, adding that the senate should not "punish" Central residents because their area leaders "messed up."

In other business, the senate unanimously moved to thank Gerry Grady, who has served for 30 years as director of community relations, for his fine service to the University, students and the community.

Prof honored with $18,000 award

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts sociology professor Alice S. Rossi has been selected as a Common Wealth Award recipient for excellence in her profession.

Rossi, who has taught undergraduate and graduate courses at UMass since 1974, will join prominent figures such as former Secretary of State George P. Schultz and broadcast journalist David Brinkley in Wilmington, Del. later this month at a reception to honor the winners.

"The award is absolutely well-deserved for her, and she is travelling with the type of company she should be," said Gerald Platt, chairman of the sociology department at UMass.

The American Sociological Association nominated Rossi for the award, citing her analysis on the status of women as compared with men in modern societies, and her research on how work and family roles intertwine and effect socities.

The awards, an $18,000 cash gift and a sculptured metal trophy, will be presented on April 28.

"I will give the money away, partly to my children and grandchildren, and part to a public purpose," Rossi said.

Rossi has taught Human Sexuality and Feritilty, Sociology and Parenthood, Adult Developement, Study of Lives and Family Theory and Research at UMass.

The Common Wealth Awards recognize outstanding achievement and serve as incentive for future contribution to the recipients' field. The awards, which have been in existence since 1979, were established by the late Ralph Hayes, a philanthropist who dedicated much of his life to raising and managing charitable funds.

In his will, Hayes left a trust fund under the direction of the Executory of the Bank of Delaware. Members of the bank's board of directors select winners each year.

"If there were anything that got me reading and thinking seriously, it was sex discrimination," Rossi said.

"A personal experience of extreme sexual discrimination at the University of Chicago" influenced her career objectives, she said.

After her experience at the University of Chicago, Rossi spent six months writing her first major work on sexual

Recycling effort slated for fall

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Correspondent

A campus-wide recycling program at the University of Massachusetts scheduled to begin next semester will encompass residence halls and administrative and office buildings, according to John Findley, co-chair of the "Jniversity Recycling Committee.

The program was instituted because of a new town regulation under which the Amherst landfill will no longer accept recyclable material from UMass as of next year, Findley said.

Committee co-chair Marty Smith, senior architect for the physical plant, said the committee had hired Earthworm, a Boston- based consulting firm, to help set up the program.

Earthworm will make proposals regarding recyclable materials, such as where materials are to be taken, and estimated costs of the program, he said.

Findley said the recyclable materials will include newspaper, white paper, computer paper, glass and, possibly, cardboard and aluminum.

One focus of the program will be educating students, faculty and administrative staff about which material can be recycled and where to put them, Smith said.

He said students may be hired through the program, possibly as work-study positions.

"But all plans are contingent on the availability of funding," Smith said.

Some organizations have already begun recycling programs at the University.

The Recycling Department, which employs one full-time worker and three students, collects white paper and computer paper for recycling from 51 office buildings on campus, according to Bill Barrett, assistant director for administrative services.

Also in existence is the University Recyclers, a student recycling organization.

"The University Recyclers are our link with the students," Smith said.

Student forms recycling group

Tonight, like every Thursday night this semester, Randy Bray will drive to Butterfield Residence Hall and sort out the paper and glass the residents there leave for him.

And then it's off to the recycling center at the Amherst Landfill to recycle them.

Bray, a natural resource studies major, also collects material from Brett House and his home, Field Residence Hall.

Bray said he feels recycling should be a top priority for everyone. "We have to strive as a society to be as least impacting on the environment as possible," he said.

Along with Sherill Baldwin, who wants to create a major through the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration program combining solid wasted management, recycling and education.

Bray has formed a group named the University Recyclers which presently consists of 25 students and will hopefully soon be an RSO, he said.

"We've submitted a constitution and are waiting to hear from the [the Student Government Association] on our status," he said.

Baldwin said that when the campus-wide recycling effort starts next semester, University Recyclers will concentrate on student education,

"A lot of people want to get involved with recycling. If we set up a solid base on this campus for recycling, we can keep it going forever," she said.

NPR show examines racism

The second part of a National Public Radio show about racism at the University of Massachusetts will air today at 5:30 p.m. on "All Things Considered" on WFCR, 88.5 FM.

The show is "an opportunity for Black and White students to talk about their experiences with race and race relations at UMass," said producer Michael Fields.

Fields said UMass was chosen for the show because of the racial incidents that have occured on campus in recent years and for the University's size.

"It's a campus that's had some problems with race relations in the past," he said.

Field believes UMass' large size will enable him to make the program relevant to other large universities across the country.

The show consists of three panel discussions held at UMass. One panel was mixed with Blacks and Whites talking about the racism issue, one panel was composed of only Black participants and one panel of only Whites, he said.

"Basically we try to give the student perspective," he said, "not the expert's."

PHI BETA KAPPA

Nu Chapter of Massachusetts

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

The Coordinating Dean of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Frederick Byron, Jr., and Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa are pleased to announce new members elected from the Junior and Senior classes. Phi Beta Kappa is the oldest and most prestigious American honor society in the Liberal Arts. It was founded at the College of William and Mary on December 5, 1776. Yale's chapter was formed in 1780, Harvard's in 1781. During the next century additional chapters were added and in 1983 a national organization called the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa was created. At present, only 237 liberal arts colleges or universities have been accredited by the national organization and permitted to form chapters. In New England only six public institutions are so recognized.

Candidates do not apply for membership nor is application made on their behalf. They are nominated by the chapter's faculty members on the basis of their academic records as shown on their transcripts. Candidates must be majors in one of the three faculties of the College of Art and Sciences and must satisfy certain grade-point, foreign language, and distribution requirements set by the national organization. Approximately 4% of Seniors with the strongest academic records are elected each year; one half of 1% of Juniors are selected.

For information on Phi Beta Kappa and its chapter at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, visit the Phi Beta Kappa display near the card catalogue in the Tower Library.

equality. "Equality between the Sexes: An Immodest Proposal," appeared in Daedalus in the spring of 1964.

"Her publication in Daedulus was pace setting for people, both men and women, on equal rights for women," said Platt. "She has been a force in the department and brought light to the university."

"When a person takes a position as I did [in Daedulus], a natural flow of events follows," Rossi said. "One thing leads to another."

One thing led to a number of things for Rossi. Rossi is one of the founding members of the National Organization for Women. "In 1966, a small group of people got together in Washington D.C. and established the by-laws, and formally launched it," she said. "We served as the board of directors until chapters were established."

As a member of the Advisory Board of the Committee on Marriage and Divorce from 1968 to 1971, she served as a consultant to the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws when the commission wrote the no-fault divorce law.

Rossi, a mother of three, said she used her experiences as a parent in writing her new book, Of Human bonding: Parent-Child Relations across the Life Course.

"I drew upon my own experiences watching the transition of my children through adolescence and adulthood. The changes have contributed to my book," she said.

The new book is expected to be on the shelves in the fall.

The status of women is improving in some respects, and is still grim in others, Rossi said.

"There's been a radical change in the occupational choice of women. Women are moving into jobs that pay better and they stay in the labor force for a longer time, with only short absences," she said.

"Women are now considered co-bread winners. This is better for all, there's less pressure on the man to make the money, because there's a partner to bring money in, they share the responsibilty. The mother works, so the father doesn't have to overwork," she said.

Children also benefit because they see more of the father Rossi said.

Despite the advancement of women in the workforce, there is an increasing number of women and children in poverty, she said.

"There are too many single headed households. It's a long battle ahead of unsolved problems," Rossi said.

Rossi's husband Peter, also a sociology professor at UMass, received the Common Wealth Award in 1985. Alice Rossi said, "It took the edge off being the recipient this year. If you believe your spouse deserves the award, and only you are honored, it takes away some of our pleasure."

Reilly said last night that Chambers and Smith should not protest the election.

"The ballots were counted three times," Reilly said, adding that negative campaigning is an unfortunate part of every election.

"That's just politics," he said. "We cannot control negative campaigning. I watched people ripping down my posters and I didn't say anything. That's just part of the election."

"Four votes is the same as 200. We won, and that's it," he said.

Reilly said negative campaigning could have hurt he and Zarganes as much as Chambers and Smith, since voters may have either avoided the ballot boxes, or voted for Chambers and Smith assuming the posters – five different ones in the past week – were placed by Reilly and Zarganes.

"People were talking about completely fabricated information at the ballot boxes." – Election coordinator Jennifer MacNeish

According to MacNeish, however, election officials do not believe Reilly and Zarganes were at fault. Both Zarganes and Reilly have denied involvement in placing or producing posters.

However, several other students, including Student Government Association Sens. W. Greg Rothman, Brian Darling, and former SGA presidential candidate Josh Gordon, have been accused by Chambers of producing and placing flyers.

Rothman denied involvement, while Darling refused to comment and Gordon said he would not deny being involved in the production or placement of posters.

Reilly said another point to consider is that a second election would not necessarily mean an end to negative campaigning.

"It will be worse than the first election," he said. "There would be more accusations of ballot stuffing and illegal voters – it would just be a new can of worms and another distasteful election."

Still, Chambers and Smith say they were nothing short of robbed of victory.

"If students understood the extent of negative campaigning [in the election], I believe they would be outraged, and I believe they would want another election," Chambers said.

Classroom heterosexism discussed

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Correspondent

Pseudonyms have been used in some cases to protect the identities of students

There is an assumption by University of Massachusetts professors and students alike that gays do not exist in the classroom, according to Tony, a gay student.

This and other instances of homophobia and heterosexism have been the common experience of several lesbian, bisexual and gay students who spoke yesterday in the Campus Center on the "Let us teach you" panel, part of the UMass' sixth annual Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week.

The meeting of 35 people, organized jointly by the faculty staff group for Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Concerns and the Office of Human Relations, gave faculty, students and staff a chance to hear the students' experience.

"The individual stories give us concrete examples [of heterosexism and homophobia], and help us in developing strategies on dealing with it," said University Ombudsperson Howard Gadlin, who moderated the forum.

Several students cited examples, particulary from foreign language classes, where teachers ask individuals students to describe their boyfriend or girlfriend, assuming the students are involved in female-male relationships.

"Much of the heterosexism in the classroom is subtle and therefore its hard to openly confront it," said Susan, a bisexual student. Fears of the reactions by teachers and other students are other reasons that these issues are not confronted, students said.

Mary, however, said there has generally been a worsening attitude toward the gay community and that students feel more empowered to speak in a heterosexist manner.

"We have to make teachers feel they have a responsibility to address homophobia," she said.

Felice Yeskel, program director for lesbian, gay and bisexual concerns in the Office of Human Relations, said she was concerned that so few faculty showed up considering all the individual invitations that were sent to them.

Student assaulted, car reported stolen

A woman told police she was assaulted Tuesday night while walking on campus near Bartlett Hall. She said a tall, slim man with a dark complexion approached her from behind and grabbed her.

The assailant ran off when other people arrived to the vicinity, according to police. Police are investigating the incident.

A 1982 Toyota Corona was reported stolen from E lot Tuesday. An estimate of the vehicle was not available.

In other police reports:

- A chemistry reference book was reported stolen Tuesday from a lab in Hasbrouck.
- Two vehicles parked in lot 40 were hit Tuesday by a third vehicle, police said. Witnesses are working with police to identify the vehicle. Damage was estimated at $400.
- A woman reported damage to the side mirror and taillight of her vehicle parked in lot 22 Tuesday.
- A man reported his vehicle parked in E lot Tuesday was broken into and a radar detector and stereo were stolen. There was also extensive damage to the interior of the vehicle, police said. Damage was estimated at $300.
- A 28-year-old Amherst man was arrested Tuesday on an outstanding warrant from the Massachusetts State Police after he was stopped for a wrong way violation on Sylvan access road.

■ tuition hike

"In all cases [financial aid] will cover the proposed increases. It is geared to help middle to lower income families," he said.

Zoulas said the average amount of aid for the 1,400 new recipients will be between $200 and $300, he said.

This tuition increase will be the second such raise in as many years making for a total increase of 15 percent over 1987 levels.

This increase, as with the last, will fall under the tuition retention plan instituted by the Regents last year to aid state colleges and Universities in raising funds, Zoulas said.

Provost Richard O'Brien said the tuition increase is a necessary evil that must be considered to insure that the campus has enough money to provide students with a quality education.

"We are in a very delicate position," O'Brien said, "it isn't that we're well off – we're pretty much on the edge. If it turns out we need it to provide a quality education, then I'm in favor of it."

There is concern among some on campus such as the Massachusetts Society of Professors, that an increase of tuition while a tuition retention plan is in effect allows the Legislature to cut an equal amount from public higher education's budget.

Election reflections

The Student Government Association election is history at this point, but I can't help wanting to voice some of my reflections and raising questions I've had on the race. I am just conceited enough to think you may want to hear my thoughts and questions.

Reflection –1: Nightmare on my floor. (The night before election day) I wrap myself in a modest towel adorned with colorful pictures of Mickey, Pluto and Goofy. As I step into my hall with only a thin piece of quality fabric to protect me from the world, someone grabs my hand and pumps it with vigor, "Hi, I'm Josh!" I scream.

Reflection –2: Lunch in the Berkshire Dining Commons. I'm cornered by a "Jay Miller wanna be" that advises me with much emotional arm waving to vote for Guy Glodis.

"Why?" I asked, keeping my queries short and simple.

"Because he's the only one running that's going to –&–ing do anything." He hands me a leaflet.

"Says here that Guy is going to fight the alcohol policy," I remark. "Don't you think he's wasting his time? I'll bet you the remaining meals left on my meal plan that the policy gets stricter before it becomes more lenient."

"Yeah, but, well he's the only one running that's gonna –*&–ing do anything." At every question I ask, this campaign manager repeats the same phrase. I briefly imagine myself running for office with this bozo as my right hand man. But only briefly, because it's only funny at first.

Reflection –3: (A dream) I'm watching the speech of an SGA candidate that has had the whole campus a buzz. The Student Union Ballroom is packed, awaiting the pre-election address. I claw my way to the front punching and kicking.

The man of the hour strolls to the podium, surrounded by supporters and led by his mom. "I'm not going to beat around the bush," he begins modestly. "If elected . . . this will look great on my resume. Thank you and good night."

Seeking the Opinion of the Unwashed Masses: I decided to go out and see the reactions of the average working-class student on the past election. I polled 257 people under the age of 25 at random, of the 257 people polled 32 percent thought that SGA stood for the Sylvan Gay Alliance.

When asked if they thought the candidates addressed the various issues that had direct influence upon the social and educational status of this institution and those students who attended this institution, 28 percent said "yes", twenty-two percent answered "no", while a whopping fifty-three percent said, "Please repeat the question."

When asked if the election were re-run with the same candidates today, would you still vote the same way: 67 percent said they would if they could remember who they voted for. 14 percent said that they didn't understand the question.

When asked if they were surprised that Tracy Davis controlled over 60 percent of the vote after the Minuteman predicted in their March 20th edition that ". . . the average UMass student is not taking the Davis campaign seriously," 41 percent polled admitted that they do not read the Minuteman. 29 percent answered that they do not take the Minuteman seriously, and 30 percent were undecided.

When asked if they thought that the majority of the candidates ran for the SGA seat in order to beef up their resumes, 50 percent said "Can't be!," 30 percent said "yes" and the remaining 20 percent refused to comment.

When asked if they cared if they were ever polled again, 60 percent said, "no," 35 percent answered "yes" and five percent said they'd get back to me.

As a final thought, I'd like to say that I'm glad the election is over and that I'm elated that all of those flyers are gone. And although I'm not especially bright, I think that the best person won. Which just goes to show you that America isn't all that bad.

They said it . . .

"We do not know what immutable differences in behavior, nature, ability, or possibility exist between men and women . . . But it is clear that, until social expectations for men and women are equal and just, until equal respect is provided for both men and women, our answers to the questions of ummutable differences, of "true" nature, of who should be the scientist and who should be the secretary, will simply reflect our prejudices."

The search for a realistic magazine

I can't read women's magazines anymore.

I used to. Just for a laugh. The things they'd tell me were hilarious. This year, it's in style to perm your hair, and dahling, you must wear that coral-based makeup. Slim and sleek is in. Join the millions, look like everyone else does, but remember, you are your own woman. Even if "real" women (according to the advertisers) wear eight tons of makeup, mousse their hair until they go bald, wear clothing that makes breathing impossible, and wear shoes that were created by the CIA for spy-torture.

They'd tell me how to snag a man, how to marry a man, or how it was OK to not want commitment (as long as I had a slew of casual boyfriends.) Of course, I'd have to be painfully aware of the time left to me by my biological clock. According to many of these magazines, there is something wrong with a woman who doesn't have a child, and doesn't feel incomplete because of it.

I don't read many of these so-called "women's magazines" anymore. They aren't for women. They are for fashion designers. They are for Vidal Sasson. They are for cosmetics and perfume. There is nothing wrong with these things. Makeup, nice clothes, and pretty hair are wonderful things to have. There's only one problem. There's more to being a woman than clothes, makeup, and glamour.

In magazines such as Good Housekeeping, tips on how to get your laundry at its brightest, how to decorate your home, how to clean your house in only a half-an-hour, and how to seduce your husband are also featured. They have a few token stories about single women, but they are almost always love stories. "Jane, even though she has a successful and rewarding career, good friends, and a close-knit family, feels something is missing. Bob sweeps her off her feet and makes her realize that all she wanted was a husband and kids."

Any woman who wants a husband and kids has my support. If it makes you happy, you should do it. I'm just getting sick of every magazine I read assuming that I want a husband and kids, that I want to stay at home and that I live for looking like the women in their ads. I don't.

I get tired of hearing about how I should dress, how I should wear my hair, how I should wear makeup (God forbid a woman doesn't want to wear makeup), and what perfumes are the best choices. There's more to my life than this crap. I haven't seen a woman's magazine that accepts this. Sure we are liberated, we can wear string bikinis without arousing any strong disapproval. Please.

Why is it that I've never seen a magazine that addresses things like jobs, family, and health in a realistic way? Instead of telling me how to dress for success in every issue, give me tips on career strategies. Why can't magazines stop assuming that all women either stay at home with the kids or at least are obligated to do most (if not all) of the housework if they have careers? Instead of dieting, concentrate on how to stay healthy.

I've listened to too many average-sized, healthy women tell me they are "sows" to enjoy seeing dieting tips in every magazine.

I like looking good. I am all for a woman having a husband and family, if that's what she wants. Dieting is fine, if it's for health reasons. However, there is more to my life than being a pretty, thin, "liberated," woman-who-needs-a-man. According to many magazines, that's abnormal.

Preventing abortion

Over the last few months the topic of abortion has been spotlighted in the news. First off, I can be classified as pro-choice, although I do feel that abortion is unnecessary. Abortion is the symptom of a larger problem — the lack of, or the improper use of, birth control.

I understand that birth control methods are not 100 percent effective, but proper use would drastically reduce the number of unwanted pregnancies, thereby reducing the need for abortions. If the amount of energy spent of protesting the issue was spent educating our children (and adults) about birth control methods and sex, the problem would be alleviated within several years.

Of course, this education will be wasted if contraceptives are not made accessible to all who request them regardless of what their age. (Over 1 million women under the age of 18 became pregnant last year.)

The perceived immorality and the uncomfortable feelings that surround the use of birth control are our biggest obstacles in changing peoples' attitudes. I understand that the world is not perfect and there will still be circumstances in which abortion is necessary, such as when a woman's life is in danger or when a woman has been raped. A law will not change the attitudes of the people or give people a sense of responsibility for their actions. The answer is not to make abortion illegal, but to make sex education and the use of contraceptives the norm.

Posters misleading

This is to assure the entire university community, and residents of the Commuter Area specifically, that there will indeed be a Union Program Council Spring Concert on the pond on May 7.

It seems that someone, while campaigning against two candidates for the Commuter Area co-presidency distributed a flyer accusing them of stealing money that should have been used to fund the pond show, and subsequently preventing the show from happening.

This is simply not true. First, the Commuter Area Government does not fund the pond concert, the UPC pays for it all. Secondly, this implies that UPC is behind the defamatory negative campaigning. We are not. UPC is not a political organization. We do not endorse anyone's cadidacy, nor do we slander anyone's. We simply produce concerts.

We at UPC are incensed that anyone would link us or our show to the Commuter elections, and that we have been drawn into this ridiculous situation, simply because someone wants to prevent people from being elected — even if they have to fabricate an out and out lie to do so.

Discovering what we want

Did you ever wonder what you were supposed to get out of college? Math majors know how to solve equations (among other things). Science majors know about plants, animals, chemicals, and how the human body works. Business majors know how to run a business, how to make the most profit, etc. But what does this mean? What have we really learned?

Minu Sebastian

Being in college involves a lot of pressure. Trying to get papers in on time, cramming for exams, and at the same time trying to determine what to do with the rest of your life. All this stress can make you wonder. . . What am I doing here? What is this all for?

Some choose majors which will make them a great deal of money. Others choose a field where they feel they can make a difference or change the world. And there are some people who don't know what they want or why they'd want it.

Trying to decide on a major is a difficult decision. Most people spend a great deal of time trying to figure it out — at least I have. First, I thought I wanted to be a business major. I started to fulfill the requirements such as Econ 103, Econ 104, Math 121, and Accounting 221. I wasn't sure if business was for me — the whole process of going into the School of Management seemed so restrictive. I also thought about psychology, learning about the human mind seemed so fascinating. Then I thought about a COINS major. . . that thought came and went very quickly. After it took me twenty minutes to figure out how to turn the computer on, I decided to take another route.

It seemed like I was looking for a career where I would make a lot of money. Money is important, but it's not everything. None of those careers were really for me.

Most of the classes I've been taking have been trying to fulfill certain requirements for a prospective major or a Gen-Ed requirement. But, this semester, I decided to take Legal Studies 250. It doesn't teach you formulas, facts, or how to make money.

Professor d'Errico has opened my mind to question issues and events that I never used to think about. I've learned about the legal system, violence in our society, and terrorism. I've also learned about human nature and the power of authority in our society. But, most important, I've learned to think for myself. Now I really question what goes on around me. I try not to take my rights or the power I have for granted.

I am still not sure what career I want, but I know what I don't want. I have learned about myself and what is important to me. With that knowledge, I think I'm heading in the right direction.

So, next time you feel stressed out or frustrated because your GPA isn't high enough or because you can't find the right career, be patient. Keep trying different courses and try not to lose sight of who you are and what you can offer. Keep the faith and remember. . . it's not all in what you know, it's what you've learned.

Heterosexuals promiscuous also

I would like to point out the irony of Rusty Denton's assertion that this nation discourages cheating on your partner ("Double-standard for conduct wrong," April 11) in light of an article in the same paper reporting the "resounding ovation" received by unfaithful Wade Boggs on Fenway's opening day ("Boggs cheered, Clemens razzed in home opener", April 11).

And what do the ever-increasing reports of date-rape, not to mention the apparent popularity of Spring Break in Florida, suggest about how heterosexuals view promiscuity? Contrary to Denton's message, it is too often the heterosexual community that promotes double-standards for the conduct it encourages for itself and condemns for others.

Animal rights go too far

I must admit that I love animals. I have a cute fuzzy dog named Morgan who's been my constant companion since I was eleven. When I have a place of my own, I want to get a couple of horses and run a kennel where I would breed dogs, and train them for police work. I enjoy working with animals, and intend to make them a part of my life.

Lisa Hamelin

Though I care about animals, I also care about people. Were it not for animal experimentation, people would be unable to get organ transplants, blood transfusions, coronary-bypass surgery, and drugs to control conditions such as depression, diabetes, and epilepsy. If there was no animal experimentation, we'd have to forget about cures for dread conditions like cancer and AIDS. I'd rather the world lose a few rats and guinea pigs than lose someone I'm close to. Animal experimentation has made several advances in veterinary medicine.

As for fur coats, I have to agree that the means of obtaining them are rather cruel. I would never get a fur coat, I don't care for the style to begin with. If I had two grand, I would put it towards the purchase of a new car before I'd buy a coat with it. I don't need any more coats, but I'm in dire need of a car.

I don't wear fur, but I do like to wear leather, suede, and wool. Some of the animal rights people are beginning to pick on those who wear leather. This is absurd. If a steer or hog is going to be slaughtered for meat, then its hide might as well be put to use, too. Some animal rights people are beginning to protest the wearing of wool, claiming that sheep are frequently nicked when they get sheared. There also happens to be thousands of men who get nicked from shaving.

If the animal rights people had their way, we wouldn't have a large choice of materials to wear. The choice would be limited to cotton, polyester, and rayon. Then again, the animal rights groups would probably blast the wearing of cotton on the grounds that millions of cute little boll weevils die in agony when cotton growers spray pesticide on their fields. We'd either have to wear synthetics or become a five billion strong nudist colony.

Animal rights activists frequently harass sportsmen. They traipse around the woods during the hunting season, screaming insults at hunters and trying to take their shotguns or longbows. The hunters become more than a bit irritated, and justly so. They paid for hunting licenses and want to use them.

It's a well-known fact that good sportsmen despise poachers and nimrods who fire on any movement they spot. Responsible hunting is a good wildlife-management tool. People who think that hunting is cruel should stroll through a deer yard at the end of winter when "Bambi" is emaciated and near death because there are too many deer and not enough food.

During World War II, millions of innocent people perished in Nazi concentration camps, yet few raised their voices in outrage in this country. No one cared when little Lisa Steinberg was beaten senseless by Joel Steinberg; people didn't want to intervene, for they felt it wasn't their business. However, millions of people are willing to rally and take action against the killing of mink, deer, and rabbits. This shows what sad shape we're in as a society.

Morality not exclusive to straights

Rusty Denton is wrong ("Double-standard for conduct wrong," April 11). There can be "morality," or standards of appropriate sexual behavior, which includes gay or lesbian sex and love. The standard is simple: it's one of consent. Using consent as a standard rules out activities such as bestiality (animals can't give consent to have sex with humans), child molestation (obviously this is against their consent), and of course, by definition, rape and sexual assault. If two adults consent to be involved, even if it is for a limited time, it must be their choice. We give that choice to heterosexuals; it must be present for gays and lesbians.

It is obviously the sexual behavior gay people engage in that concerns Denton. If this is true, he'd better direct some of his energy at heterosexuals. Heterosexuals engage in anal intercourse (sodomy) and oral sex. They also hug, kiss, hold hands, and talk, just like gay people do. Contrary to his assertions, opinion polls don't show that sexually active people are considered emotionally troubled. Especially if they are men. Men are still socialized to view sex as a less emotionally-situated experience than are women. It is not surprising that some gay men (and fewer lesbians) are promiscuous, so are some straight men (and fewer straight women).

His discussion of lesbians is unclear. Where did he get the figure that 90 percent of lesbians were molested by their fathers? They don't mesh with a growing body of research on lesbians (and gay men.) Lesbians come from all backgrounds — some abused — most not. If women become lesbians because they're freaked out by sexual abuse as children, why aren't all the women (millions more than the total number of American lesbians) who have been sexually abused, lesbians?

It's convenient for heterosexuals to think that gay people are somehow different from themselves, but it's not true. Lesbians were raised, just like their straight sisters, by the same culture and families, with basically the same values. Gay men were likewise raised by the same culture and families. Cheating and promiscuity are not desirable in any situation, that is not what we're asking for. What we want is not double standards of morality — we want a legal guarantee that we won't be fired or harassed without recourse, simply on the basis of assumptions that people make about our morality.

A tale of living with his opposite — and surviving

A common complaint at UMass is that the enormous undergraduate population makes students feel like a statistic. I'll go one step further and reduce my roommate to an algebraic variable: X.

X is the generic roommate, the one assigned to you at random and must tolerate until someone better comes along. X and I have little in common besides our phone number. Our incompatible personalities eliminate any possibility of lasting friendship, yet we manage to share a few transient laughs about our differences.

The fundamental rift between us is well advertised. Looming over X's bed is the Soviet flag. Proudly exhibited next to mine is a 24" by 36" glossy print of Batman and Robin. I need not go any further into which one of us values individual freedom.

But the decoration dispute runs deeper. Next to my "America's First Family" group shot of Fred, Wilma, Pebbles and Dino, hangs a gloomy grey-and-white Picasso print. Nostalgic photographs and postcards adorn my corner of the room. Tacked to his wall is a Vincent Van Gogh calendar and a poster commemorating a West German butterfly museum. I dwell on memories of friends and experiences; X reminisces about dead painters and moths.

Not surprisingly our heroes do not overlap. I strive for the ideals of Marty Barrett, Lee Montville, Ted Koppel, and Martin Short. He cowers to the dogma of William Shakespeare and Karl Marx. A glance at his bookshelf lends further credence to my charge that X is a psuedo-intellectual. Occupying the entire lower tier is William and Ariel Durant's The Story of Civilization series, a ten volume set. Not once has X opened one of those books; they are for show. His shameful motive is clear. X uses reference materials to attract and impress psuedo-intellectual women.

Darren Garnick

To X's credit, the scooping strategy has worked. A female character named Peach has been haunting the premises. Yes, that is her real name.

When my roommate isn't snacking on Peaches, he is digging in on some other type of Yuppie delicacy. I once caught him spreading pomegranate preserves on wheat crackers. If that isn't atrocious enough, he was listening to classical music during the process. My favorite munchy, cold cereal straight from the box, would classify as too blue-collar for X's tastes.

Contradiction inevitably resurfaces during our leisure time. X abhors exercise, whining that he "can't stand the stress." I get a dirty look whenever I invite him to go running. My tennis racquet and swim goggles symbolize pain, for X finds no joy in sports. He had the nerve to dismiss softball as "a little boys' game."

X prefers little girls' games. Experimenting with different style ponytails is his idea of fun. My roommate spends more time on his hair than I do on my homework. Putting rubber bands in his anti-establishment long hair, X quietly congratulates himself for his courageous social statement.

On occasion, our minor differences do spark conflict.

My aerobics class has instilled in me a strange affinity for top-40 music. The lyrics of Paula Abdul and Debbie Gibson make my roommate cringe. Armed with this knowledge, I have a few key songs stored on tape for harassment purposes. Using Paula and the Debster are much more effective than traditional swear words. When insulted, X will mutter something pretentious like "Your anger only serves to strengthen me."

A quote tacked to X's bulletin board summarizes our roommate relationship: "We cannot change anything unless we accept it. Condemnation does not liberate, it oppresses." - Carl Jung.

I am pointing out our differences, not condemning them. Despite the fact that my roommate is a card-carrying Marxist liberal pacifist, I like him. Together we show how two people from opposite sides of the cultural spectrum can live together peacefully. For one semester anyway.

DA: Killer was suffering from paranoia

BOSTON (AP) — Lonnie Gilchrist was not criminally responsible when he shot and killed his boss at a downtown Merrill Lynch office last year because of a deep paranoia that he was the victim of prejudice, his attorney argued yesterday.

Defense attorney Norman Zalkind said Gilchrist's troubled childhood in a south End neighborhood with an abusive alcoholic father framed his client's later life and left him feeling powerless and blaming racism for his failures.

Zalkind also told the jury in closing arguments that the nature of the crime reflected Gilchrist's mental state on the day after he was fired from the firm, and urged jurors to find Gilchrist not guilty by reason of insanity.

"He was out of control, with no plan of escape in front of literally dozens of people, and what did he say? That 'No billionaire is going to do this to me!' " Zalkind said.

But Assistant District Attorney Ronal Moynahan said Gilchrist behaved normally the morning he killed George Cook, a regional vice president for Merrill Lynch. He said Gilchrist canceled a dental appointment, complete $125,000 bond transaction and told co-workers he was going to teach Cook a lesson before the shooting.

The defense "wants you to disregard all of that and believe for the moment in his lifetime he had a brief reactive psychosis. It reactive psychosis typically affects young men inn catastrophic or combat situations.

"He was fired at 6:30 the night before, why didn't he do it then?" Moynahan said. "It's because he didn't have his gun with him."

A tall black man with a strong build and thick glasses, the defendant sat with his hands folded and listened intently tohis defense attorney's summation.

Jury deliberatons began later yesterday.

Gilchrist, 42, is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School who Zalkind said strove for success but failed to hold down jobs at a major Boston bank, a Chicago commodities firm, and a major computer manufacturer before he joined Merrill Lynch, where he worked for two years.

After each failure, Gilchrist claimed he was discriminated against his employer, Zalkind said.

"Why did a man so intelligent fail so often?" Zalkind said. "Was that because he was a bad guy, or was that a result of his illness?"

On April 7, 1988, the day after he was fired, Gilchrist entered Cook's office, "went over as Mr Cook was sitting in his chair, put (the gun) up as close as he could to him and shot him three times," Moynahan said.

As Cook crawled toward his door crying for help, witnesses saw Gilchrist fire two more shots as he kicked and beat the executive.

"It's a murder in the absolute coldest of blood," Moynahan said.

Zalkind never contested the evidence surrounding the shooting.

Gilchrist had gone to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to file a complaint against Merrill Lynch in anticipation of his being fired. But Zalkind said in his opening statements that Cook actually "spent a lot of time with Gilchrist" and tried to help him, but "the reality was he was a total failure, he was making no commissions, practically."

Wellesley College receives $10 million gift

WELLESLEY (AP) — Wellesley College will use a record $10 million gift for financial aid and expansion of campus facilities, a spokeswoman said Wednesday.

"This is an enormous gift," said Ann O'Sullivan, noting that the gift is the largest in the history of the women's college.

The donation was pledged last weekend by Elisabeth Kaiser Davis, who graduated from the college in 1932, and her husband, Stanton W. Davis, at the beginning of the school's $150 million fund-raising campaign, O'Sullivan said.

The money will be used for financial aid for continuing education students, expansion of the science center, dormitory renovatons and for a new student dining hall to be named after the Davises.

Both the Davis' daughters also were graduated from Wellesley. Their son went to his father's alma mater, Dartmouth College.

"Wellesley is terribly important as one of the top liberal arts colleges in the country, and we are going to support it," Davis said.

He established a philanthropic foundation when he sold Shaw's Supermarkets to a British chain of food stores in 1987.

At a fund-raising dinner at the college, Mrs. Davis said she hoped the gift would be used to enrich the quality of student life.

Classical guitar L.A. style

By BRYAN HOUSE
Collegian Correspondent

Last Saturday night at Bowker Auditorium, the Los Angeles Guitar Quartet, made up of Anisa Angarola, John Dearman, William Kanengiser, and Scott Tennant displayed their unique sound which has made them America's premier guitar ensemble.

Formed in 1980, their repertoire ranges from Renaissance dance consorts, to fiery Spanish ballet, to noble baroque concerti and comtemporary works.

The quartet played five pieces, Gustav Host's "St. Paul's Suite", Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3", selections from Copland's "Rodeo", Manuel de Falla's "El Amor Brujo", and a new piece, commisioned by the New England Presenters (composed by David Leisner), based on, and named after a Rudyard Kipling short story The Cat Walked By Himself, which was the centerpiece of the performance. For an encore to end the evening, they played "Turkey in the Straw".

The Bach and Copland pieces were excellent, with the performers displaying their tremendous talents in a torrid fury of spiraling ecstasy. The "Brandenburg Concerto" allowed each instrument to step forward from the tutti texture, which was ideally suited for the four guitar arrangement. Copland's "Rodeo", drew upon Western folk tunes to capture the pioneer spirit that characterizes the work, from the portrait of peace and beauty of dusk settling over the plain in "Corral Nocturne" to square dance amidst hollers and gun shots of Saturday night festivities after the frontier rodeo "The Hoe Down".

The only disappointment of the evening was the new work be Leisner, "The Cat Walked By Himself". Overly pretentious, the work lacked a steady rhythm to pull it through the continuous changes in the story. Although the piece showcased the ensembles incredible talent, it lacked suspense and a climax, and became monotonous towards the end.

However, the followed "The Cat Walked By Himself" with "El Amor Brujo", a more interesting piece of music composed by Spain's most celebrated 20th century composer, de Falla. It focused on the flamenco style, which is the staple of classical guitar work. A rousing piece about a young gypsy girl named Candelas who is haunted by the ghost of her dead lover, it ended the show on a spirited note. The followed it with "Turkey in the Straw", a classic folk song in which the ensemble blended old Western themes with other various novelties, closing the evening with an enthusiastic rave-up.

Although the performance got caught in a rut in the middle, the virtuosity of the performers and the strength of the beginning and ending material made the performance an excellent showcase for the meticulous precision of America's leading guitar quartet.

Drivin'n'Cryin's new album, Mystery Road (their third disc in less than three years) on Island records, is worthy of more praise than I can come up with adjectives for. Their music is described as "metallic rockers with introspective country inflected ballads" but it's the fusion of these two styles, coupled with such points as the solid muscal craftsmanship of all the band members and the vocals especially that make Drivin'n'Cryin stand out.

Kevin Kinney, the frontman, has admitted to being "called a folk singer with long black hair." But what happens here is those often thought provoking folky lyrics are not backed by hazey lovey dovey Iron Horsey guitars, pulling the words back into themselves in a dreary desert of musical futility, but by driving and crying guitar work, courtesy of Kinney and Buren Fowler. The drumming and bass playing, from Jeff Sullivan and Tim Nielsen respectively, is also very solid, and together the whole combo seems to give Kinney the ideal forum for expression.

"Ain't It Strange" is reminiscent of the Pogue's musical miish-mash, while "Toy Never Played With" escapes comparison with R.E.M. only because of its ever mounting pasion/anger. "Malfunction Junction" is plain raunchy, at a time in great need of raunch, and "Straight To Hell" is somewhere between pretty and sad. The absolute stand-out on this album, the album Kinney describes as being "the one that sounds most like us," is "With The People." The title is not pretentious so much as to think it is to be pretentiously cynical. The song is simply beautiful and should be bathed in often.

In two days, Drivin'n'Cryin will join R.E.M. on their Green tour, but tonight, they play with Even The Odd and The Fortunetellers at the Bluewall. The show starts at 8 p.m., is sponsored by WMUA, and . . . it's free.

Reggae original rocks on

Tonight at "Ten Below" at Pearl St. Nightclub, top reggae drummer Winston Grennan [right] takes the stage for an evening of native Jamaican music.

Grennan, who boldly (and somewhat bitterly) claims to have created reggae music, has backed the likes of Bob Marley, Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh with his rock-steady beat.

Now a resident of Woodstock, New York, Grennan went through a period of unhappiness when he first moved to the US, forced to cope with frigid Chicago winters, and random crime in New York City. The reggae percussionist now tours the country with his Ska-Rocks band.

Tonight's show begins at 8 p.m.

Major League bats far less than 1.000

By DOUG MIDDLETON
Collegian Correspondent

Major League
Mt. Farms Theaters

Major League is an amiable baseball comedy, but unfortunately, amiable does not carry the film. This is one of those films where you know all the funniest bits from the television commercial, so when they arrive on the screen they tend to be a letdown.

FILM REVIEW

The plot concerns the take-over of the Cleveland Indians by an owner who desires her team to continue their woeful losing streak so she can move them to Miami. She assembles a squad of misfits only a Hollywood sports film could acquire. This motley crew includes an over-the-hill catcher Jake Taylor (Tom Berenger), a shortstop, Roger Dorn (Corbin Bernsen), who does not want to dive for grounders, in fear of messing up his face, and a recently paroled pitcher, Ricky "Wild Thing" Vaughn, played by Charlie Sheen.

The main problem with this film is that it is too predictible. This is movie baseball with slow motion swings and characters who aren't really people, just set-ups for gags. Any movie-goer knows that the film will end with the "big game", and though the Indians playoff against the Yankees is expertly and realistically filmed with the stadium filled with fans, it is about as suspenseful as an episode of "Gilligan's Island".

The majority of humor is derived from typical baseball hijinks, with the players bumping into each other, or any other scenario you may have caught on a Marv Albert "Wacky World of Sports" segment on Late Night With David Letterman. The funniest dialogue and gags are provided by Bob Uecker, who downs Jack Daniels while providing his own crowd noises when their aren't any to be heard.

You've seen this all before. It's The Bad News Bears minus the teen-agers and a sorely needed Walter Mathau. There are far better sports-oriented films you can rent for the VCR. Since it is baseball season, try last summer's Bull Durham with its strong characterizations, or take a swing at Barry Levinson's mythical The Natural, starring Robert Redford. For hockey fans, Slap Shot with Paul Newman as an aging player is one of the raunchiest and best sports films, or try North Dallas Forty starring Nick Nolte as a football player on a thinly disguised team resembling the Dallas Cowboys, which scores points for its adult humor and fine performances. And if basketball is your game, try Hoosiers with the always reliable Gene Hackman.

As for Major Legue, it's not totally off-base, but compared with the above mentioned films, Major seems very minor.

Sheen and especially Berenger, do a credible job. Berenger has the thankless job of carrying the trite "love interest" story sub-plot (chasing an old girlfriend), but he comes out of the film unscathed. One of the film's best scenes in fact, has him at his ex-lover's fiancee's dinner party, where he tells off a sleek lawyer as he leaves the party with a most memorable line.

Charlie Sheen, Corben Bernsen and Tom Berenger star in the Paramount Pictures release Major League, which premiered in theaters last week. Box office returns have been in the millions of dollars, while reviews have been mixed.

There's more than one litter problem in your neighborhood.

They never asked to be born. But their mother's owners figured the local animal shelter would surely find them good homes.

They didn't realize that most of the 14.5 million unwanted animals put to death each year are not strays. They're puppies and kittens born in nice homes like yours that have to be killed to make room for more.

Having your pet spayed or neutered is the only way to reduce the sad number of ownerless dogs and cats destroyed this year. It will also increase your pet's chances of living a longer and healthier life. That responsibility is yours alone. You'll never stop your pets from acting naturally. DEATH SHACK — This is a shack on the ranch near Matamoros, Mexico, where authorities found the mutilated bodies of at least 12 victims, including the body of University of Texas student Mark Kilroy. Authorities the killings are linked to drugs and satanic worship.

Harvard takes record number of minorities

BOSTON (AP) — Harvard University had accepted a record number of minority students for the class of 1993, including 2 percent more Asian-Americans, to 15.3 percent of the 2,150 students admitted, is not a response to complaints of discrimination at the nation's oldest universaity.

Since last fall the U.S. Department of Education has been investigatin gwhether Harvard and the University of California at Los Angeles used illegal quotas to restrict the number of Asian-Americans admitted. Both schools have denied using quotas for any ethnic group.

"This is the twelfth year in a row that we've set a record for Asian-American admissions," said William R. Fitzsimmons, dean of undergraduate admissions and financial aid.

Fitzsimmons attributed the increase to a steady rise in both the percentage of Asian-Americans in the applicant pool and the quality of the students applying.

The U.S. population is only about 2 percent Asian. But because Asian-Americans tend to be high academic achievers, they represent a much higher percentage on the campuses of many top universities.

Asian-Americans leaders, however, have said the real issue is not how many Asians are on campus, but what percentage of qualified applicants are accepted.

About 14.6 percent of Asian-Americans who applied to Harvard were accepted into the class of 1993, compared with 13.3 percent last year.

That is likely to mean that 16 to 17 percent of next fall's freshmen will be Asian, because Asian-Americans admitted to Harvard tend to attend at higher rates than do other ethnic groups, including whites, Fitzsimmons said.

Overall, 32.3 percent of those admitted were minorities, the highest ever, he said. Black student accounted or 9.6 percent, virtually unchanged from last year, and Hispanic students for nearly 7 percent, he said.

Roughly 13 percent of those admitted were the sons or daughters of Harvard alumni, down slightly from previous years.

"Our policy has always been, all other things being equal, we would try to tip to sons and daughters of alumnae and alumni," Fitzsimmons said.

Applications to Harvard dropped 11 percent this year after a record surge last year.

Fitzsimmons attributed the drop to a decline in the total number of 18-year-olds in the Atlantic states, from which Harvard draws the most students.

"This year there will be somewhat fewer students from New England because of the demographic changes," he said. However the university accepted more applicants who planned to major in computer science, engineering, physics and mathematics.

Tuition at the Ivy League school next fall is $13,544, and room and board is $4,835. The average scholarship is $13,500, Fitzsimmons said.

PRINCESS ANNE – Britain's Princess Anne, daughter of Queen Elizabeth, after opening a parish church hall in Windsor, west of London, yesterday as Britain's royal-mad tabloid newspapers continued to speculate her 15-year marriage to Mark Phillips was on the rocks. Navy Commander Timothy Laurence, the royal aide whose stolen letters to the princess sparked rumors, stayed on duty behind the walls of nearby Windsor Castle. Phillips was on a trip to Spain.

LIFE OILY CONTINUES — Sea lions swim in the southern bay of Naked Island yesterday afternoon, as the cripled oil tanker Exxon Valdez sits at anchor off-shore. The tanker, which spilled 10.1 million gallons of crude oil into these southern Alaska waters 20 days ago, is awating temporary repairs to its damaged hull.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day to look into the true state of your financial affairs. Close the books on an old romance and go smiling in pursuit of better times. The future holds wonderful surprises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Build savings and stay in the black. Keep your credit cards in your pocket. Showing more affection will create a better climate for close relationships. Loved one needs your understanding and support.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Short-term emotional involvements may be too complicated to be satisfying. Look for new worlds to conquer in your career field. Do not give in to pressure from overly cautious associates. Think bold!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are accountable for your own actions, but not for anyone else's. As your personal resources grow, so does your happiness. Try to complete whatever you start today. Follow-through is vital.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accept life as it arrives on your doorstep. Good fortune is on the way. A parent-child relationship takes on a new dimension. This could be a day of surprising revelations. Know yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although early morning may be unsettling, by evening you will feel good about almost everything. Postpone both travel and launching new projects. Be extra careful if you work with heavy machinery. No daydreaming!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Chances are you will get important new responsibilities. Make sure you also get paid for what you will be doing. A spiritual reawakening is part of the picture. You feel a new optimism.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stay in the saddle at work and show what an effective leader you are. Outdoor activities provide a valuable change of pace. Invite a close friend to join you. Educational endeavors also pay off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Something happens that raises your expectations. You will need to be extremely diplomatic with higher-ups for the remainder of the week. Be careful not to overstep your authority. Go through channels.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Business deal will be complicated. Rely on expert advice and you could see higher profits in the near future. Pay attention to your intuition. Going against your instincts would be a big mistake.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Little will stand between you and success today. Your persistence is rewarded. Good luck affects your money supply. The worst is over where a relationship is concerned. You will find happiness again.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Listen to your peers, but make final decisions based on your own experience and knowledge. Treat children like individuals. Get skeletons out of closet.

Bruins want to forget history as they take on Montreal

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins, students of hockey and not history, believe present performances are more important than past failures to their future success.

The Bruins have made a habit of beating teams they hadn't beaten in a long time. Their next chance to to that comes Monday night in the opener of their second-round NHL playoff series at Montreal.

In the regular season, the Bruins played Montreal eight times. They had seven losses and one tie.

But in that same season, Boston had five losses and three ties in its eight games against Buffalo. Then the Bruins beat the Sabres four games to one in the playoffs.

And last season the Bruins beat Montreal 4-1 in the second round after losing 18 consecutive series over the previous 44 years to the Canadiens.

"We were 0-5-3 vs. Buffalo and we felt pretty confident," said Randy Burridge, who had the first goal in each of the last three games against the Sabres. "We feel confident after this series and we'll feel confident going into the next series."

The second game of the best-of-seven Adams Division final is scheduled in Montreal Wednesday night. The next two games will be in Boston the following Friday and Sunday nights.

Montreal is a much better team than Buffalo, eliminated in a 4-1 loss Tuesday night. It also has improved since last season when Boston went all the way to the Stanley Cup finals before being swept by Edmonton in four games.

Montreal had a 115-88 point advantage in the final Adams Division standings this season.

Gazelles scare No. 2 Harvard but fall, 8-4

Fuhrman scores three goals in losing effort

Junior Ann King brings the ball upfield in the Gazelles' 8-4 loss to Harvard yesterday at Totman Field.

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Who says history is important?

If you looked at the recent history of the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team and that of Harvard University's, you'd think that the Crimson would have blown the Gazelles off the face of the earth yesterday.

That didn't happen though. UMass gave the No. 2 team in the country all that it could handle at Totman Field yesterday afternoon. The final goal tally was Harvard 8, UMass 4 but despite the loss, this game could have a lot of positive ramifications on later dates for the Gazelles.

They know now that they are capable of playing with the best in the country. Before this game that was not the case. UMass had lost five games in a row and the teams that were walking all over the Gazelles were not of the highest caliber.

Yale pounded UMass into the ground, 17-7 at Totman a few weeks ago. And just a few days ago, Harvard whomped Yale, 16-4. What was UMass coach Patti Bossio to think coming into this game?

What she was thinking about was slowing down the ball on attack and dropping back into a tight zone on the defensive end. For most of the game, it worked.

"My hat's off to them for the strategy of the game," Harvard coach Carole Kleinfelder said. "We are a running team and they stopped us from doing that really effectively."

One person who had a big hand in shutting the Crimson down was sophomore goaltender Liz Keats. Keats had 21 saves in the game and a majority of them were of the tough variety.

Keats is a sophomore that transferred to UMass from Keene State College because Keene does not have a women's lax team. This is her first collegiate season and she had been having a tough time, but yesterday was a big turnaround.

"I just felt good," Keats said. "I've been playing a different style of goalkeeping than in high school. Today I just combined it."

Keats and the rest of the Gazelles got a big lift when senior co-captain Cathy Fuhrman put UMass up 1-0 at 7:21 of the first half.

But unfortunately it might have awoken the sleeping giant. Junior midfielder Charlote Joslin came right back for the Crimson at 7:57 to tie the game at one.

That tie lasted for a few minutes before Harvard exploded for three goals in less than 60 seconds to gain control of the first half. Junior Julie Clifford started things off for the Crimson at 10:30 with the first goal of the spurt.

Then, at 10:53, Harvard's leading scorer, junior Karen Everling scored her seventh goal of the season to put put the Crimson up 3-1. Joslin added her seventh goal of the year at 11:10 for a commanding 4-1 lead.

UMass appeared dead moments later when Lisi Baillie gave the Crimson a 5-1 lead. The Gazelles were not in awe of Harvard, though, and were not about to pack it in.

Fuhrman netted her second goal of the game at 13:42, cutting the lead to 5-2. Junior Sue Murphy got UMass right back into the game at 5:3 less than three minutes before the end of the period.

The Harvard defense, however, was superb in the second half. Fuhrman scored her third goal of the game at 1:56 but that would be the only one of the second half for UMass who fell to 1-6 on the year.

The undefeated Crimson (5-0) finished off the Gazelles with goals by Joslin (1:32), Carroll Clark (12:15), who also had two assists, and Bailliere (24:16).

"In the second half we got a little flustered," Bossio said. "We definitely had our opportunities to score and the younger kids just looked to the older kids to do everything and they have to become more of a part of what's going on."

Yesterday the Gazelles had an upper hand in much more than in recent weeks. If they can play as well as they did against Harvard yesterday, it will be enough to beat most teams.

Softball to play two at UConn

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Coaches are always downplaying rankings and ratings (remember Seton Hall?), but a date with number one is undeniably something to get excited about. And when the team in the first slot happens to be regional rival Universtity of Connecticut, that's cause for some all out hype.

The University of Massachusetts softball team will travel to Storrs, Conn. today for a doubleheader with the Huskies (first pitch scheduled for 3 p.m.). UConn enters the game as the top ranked team in the Northeast according to the NCAA while UMass occupies the third slot.

If it all sounds a bit familiar, you're probably recalling the April 2 battle these two squads waged on Totman field. UConn came to town then with the top ranking, and left on the short end of a 3-1 decision.

That win launched the Minutewomen on their current six-game winning streak. The Huskies, meanwhile, have won five of their last six, including a pair of 6-0, 10-0 poundings of the University of Rhode Island on Tuesday.

Coach Elaine Sortino's squad will head south firing on all cylinders, with the exception of Mary Duff who was hobbled following a collision at second in Sunday's game vs. Penn State The UMass bats seem healthy enough, having pounded out 25 runs in four games this past weekend (to raise the team average to .201).

"Our problems (at the plate) aren't technical," explains Sortino "they're between the ears." The recent outburst has to have helped in that respect.

"We always get excited for UConn," she continued. "This is one of those games where I have to do very little motivating."

Baseball slips past BU, 6-5

Donovan's 10th-inning suicide squeeze scores Card to win it

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Staff

If there was one key phrase in the University of Massachusetts baseball team's 6-5 win over Boston University yesterday, it was 'pinch hitting.'

Drew Seccafico, Brian Donovan and Jack Card all entered the game against the Terriers as pinch hitters and combined to go 6-for-6, with a double, a triple, three RBIs and and four runs, including the 10th-inning run that made UMass' Brian Conroy a winner.

After BU scored off of a wild pitch in the top of the extra frame, UMass came right back when Seccafico doubled to left center and took third on Derek Dana's fly to right. He crossed the plate when Card split the gap in right-center for a triple.

The winning run scored when Donovan laid down a suicide squeeze bunt, and Card sprinted home to improve the Minutemen's record to 10-11 going into today's 3 p.m. game at the University of New Hampshire.

UMass would not have had to pull off the thrilling finish if it were not for some shaky fielding early on. Five UMass errors in the first six innings helped BU establish a 3-0 lead.

However, after starter Gary Stewart was knocked out in the second, Dan O'Leary came in and pitched five strong, scoreless innings. This gave the Minuteman offense a chance to get the team back in the game. They gradually pecked away, getting a run in the sixth and the seventh and a pair in the eighth to send the game into the decisive extra inning.

Activist's death saddens students

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Abbie Hoffman, the radical 1960s activist who led massive anti-CIA protests at the University of Massachusetts three years ago, died Wednesday in his Pennsylvania apartment, the Los Angeles Times reported yesterday.

Hoffman, 52, who co-founded the Yippies and later spent seven years underground after being indicted on drug charges, was found dead in Solebury Township by Michael Waldron, his landlord and friend, after Hoffman's wife asked Waldron to check on him because Hoffman was not answering her phone calls, the Times said.

Police said there was no sign of forced entry or foul play but added that a routine autopsy was scheduled for yesterday to determine exact cause of death.

Hoffman and Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, were notorious on the UMass campus for organizing demonstrations against CIA student recruitment.

On Nov. 24, 1986, the pair led a takeover of Munson Hall. Police arrested 59 people and charged them with disorderly conduct and trespassing.

The arrests led to a highly-publicized court trial in April, 1987, in which 15 defendants, including Hoffman, Carter and several UMass students claimed the CIA was committing crimes both nationally and abroad and should be banned from campus.

The defendants were later acquitted after a trial that lasted more than a week and drew attention from all over the globe.

Several defendants in the trial gathered yesterday in the Radical Student Union to trade anecdotes and memories of the man one student called "his idol."

The students said they remember him as a flamboyant "patriot" who used theatrics to draw attention to his cause, but never allowed the seriousness of his efforts to wane.

Former UMass student Jennifer Johnston said this sense of humor was the driving force behind Hoffman's "tireless efforts."

But, she added, "he took what he was doing extremely seriously. What he stood for and what he said was very

Harassment hearing underway

Rothman, others, deny charges stemming from March incident

During a judicial hearing last night, three members of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club denied charges of harassment stemming from a March incident against two staff members of The Liberator.

The campus newspaper's writers, Commuter Area Sens. Robb Smith and Ted Chambers, said at 2 a.m. on March 7, W. Greg Rothman, Alan Brynjolfsson and Doug Dratch, along with Brian Darling, allegedly followed Smith's car to Lot 49 near Van Meter residence hall, where Smith and Chambers were distributing copies of the newspaper. Rothman and Dratch allegedly attempted to get the pair to talk to them by pulling on the doors and beating on the car, Chambers said.

Dratch, he said, also yelled at Chambers, saying, "Are you scared?" while Brynjolfsson jumped on the car.

The plaintiffs brought three witnesses to the hearing: former Student Government Association Budgets committee chairperson Jessica Mitchell, whose testimony was later dismissed for irrelevancy to the case; CAG Sen. Shari Silkoff, whose testimony was challenged by Rothman as "hearsay," and Van Meter resident Carey Feldman, who said she heard the incident from her window.

Rothman said in his defense statement that the "fun page" of The Liberator, which portrayed him as a Nazi stormtrooper, upset him because "I and close friends of mine have lost relatives (to the Nazis)."

He said when he, Darling, Brynjolfsson, Dratch and Steve Lutz went out to find the creators, "We were upset . . . we all agreed this [name-calling] has got to stop."

A decision is not scheduled to be handed down until next week, according to Celia Lyon, co-judicial advisor for the hearing.

Ginsberg: The man, the myth, the interview

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Correspondent

Art is a saving grace of a nation that is dying politically, according to Beat poet Allen Ginsberg.

But Ginsberg, who spoke earlier this week in the Student Union Ballroom, delved into several other spectrums during a press conference prior to his Tuesday night lecture.

He said drugs are a positive force that have inspired his life and his writing.

"I've written a lot while under the effects. A Whales's Visitation (written in 1967) was written in the fifth hour of an acid trip. About five percent, not 50 percent now but five percent of my poetry was written while I was on some drug."

Ginsberg said he thought drugs were a positive but not absolute force in reaching the subsconcious. He cited other positive drugs in his life, such as meditation, especially Buddhist meditation.

The poet said he has deeply felt convictions that have not changed over the years, adding that he does not enjoy the ever-growing conservative movement today.

"The movements of the sixties were not funded by Coors beer," he said, adding that the United States political business structure is becoming more and more like "big brother," with the government creeping into all facets of Americans' personal lives.

Turning to literature, Ginsberg cited three major human influences: "[Arthur] Rimbaud, because of his spiritual thirst, [Walt] Whitman, because he asked for candor, and [Jack] Kerouac, because of his spontaneity."

He said that being "Jewish, gay, white, American and a practicing Buddhist" inspired him to write, though he said, laughing, "my career started by my not wanting to have a career."

"Television is a bad drug," he said. "It doesn't present reality with the news and it rarely presents emotional reality in drama. It dehumanizes."

Turning again to literature, Ginsberg said poetry is just the imagination. "I'm very interested in the nature of consciousness and with poetry being a way to get to it."

Asked what he thought of the connection between the Symbolist movement, sur-

MFA to celebrate 25th year

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

The curriculum for the University of Massachusetts Master of Fine Arts in English has not changed significantly since it began 25 years ago, according to Professor Emeritus Joseph Langland, the program's founder.

"We put the stress on reading the literature itself rather than just the writing aspect," he said.

Today and tomorrow, the program will be celebrating its silver anniversary with panel discussions, a book sale of alumni titles and a dinner to honor Langland.

Elizabeth Berry, secretary for the program, said Pulitzer Prize-winning poet John Ashbery and American Book Award-winning novelist John A. Williams will be reading their work at the celebration.

At the time of its inception, the program was the only one of its kind in New England, said Langland, a poet and occasional lecturer at the University. Since then, it has been imitated by colleges and universities throughout the nation, he said.

"The University of Iowa has the most prominent MFA program, but we're definitely in the next group," he said.

MFA Director Dara Wier said approximately 250 poets and writers have graduated from the program. About 100 of them will be returning for the celebration, she said.

Registration for the events is scheduled to take place from 5 to 7 p.m. today in Memorial Hall, where Ashbery's reading will follow at 8 p.m.

Stacey Chase, spokesperson for the Office of Public Information, said distinguished alumni include novelist Bret Lott, author of The Man Who Owned Vermont and poet Dorothy Barresi, who won the Devil's Millhopper Chapbook Contest for The Judas Clock.

Works by MFA alumni will be sold tomorrow in Memorial Hall from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Langland said among graduates of the program, at least 40 books have been "published by first-rate publishers," while 60 to 70 works by MFA faculty have received the same honors.

Panel discussions are scheduled to take place tomorrow from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Williams will read from 8 to 9 p.m.

Berry said all events are open to the public except the dinner. For more information about panel discussions, call the MFA program at 545-0643.

Wier said the quality of writers produced by the University distinguishes the program from others of its kind.

"The writing program's support has enabled young writers from all over the country to write the books which celebrate the diversity of the American literary landscape," she said.

Puerto Rican women struggle

Activist says problems today have historic roots

By TAMARA FORT
Collegian Staff

The reason Puerto Rican women struggle in the United States today is a continuation of the lives they led in Puerto Rico centuries ago, a Latin American activist said recently.

Dr. Carmen Aponte, a professor from the State University of New York at Brockport, gave a lecture early this week on the topic as part of Latin American Week.

As native indians on the island of Puerto Rico in the 1400s, women were powerful, she said. However, when the Spanish conquered Puerto Rico, women's roles changed, Aponte said.

To increase the population on the island, Spanish women were brought into the country to reproduce, she said. African slaves were also brought to Puerto Rico, she added.

"This brings in our mixed culture, composed of African, Indian, and Spanish," Aponte said.

As a result of three cultures on an island, the population rose dramatically, and a program of population control began, she said. The most widely used approach was sterilization, she said.

By 1960, 33 percent of the women who had children were sterilized without knowing it, she said.

Aponte also said since that time, Puerto Rican women have continued to have decisions made for them.

She said Puerto Rican women have a specific place within the family structure. The woman keeps the family together, but the man makes all the decisions, she said. "She is the spinal cord of the family," Aponte said.

Abortion and adoption are not options for pregnant teens, she said. Females have been conditioned to raise children, which accounts for Puerto Rican single mothers being the poorest in the country, Aponte said.

Aponte said female Puerto Ricans with AIDS are helpless victims even more so than other groups. "If a woman's husband is an AIDS victim, she will be caring and supportive, but if a woman is a victim of AIDS, her husband will throw her out," she said.

Aponte said most Puerto Rican women as well as Blacks and other Hispanics are not followers of the National Organization for Women. "NOW is an organization of mostly middle class white women," said Aponte. "Puerto Rican women feel their issues are not represented."

serious and very important," she said.

Joe Rubin, a UMass senior and a defendant in the trial, said he met Hoffman at the Munson Hall takeover and joined efforts with the activist.

"He was a very dedicated person," Rubin said. "He was one of those people who kept up his commitments for years and years."

Hoffman was "instrumental" in gathering key witnesses for the 1987 trial, Rubin said, citing former attorney generals and ex-CIA agents as being among those who testified for the defense.

Rubin said Hoffman was seen by many as a "rebel," but was actually striving to give the power of politics back to the people through a participatory government.

"He used to talk about his dad taking him to town meetings in New England," Rubin said. "I think that's the kind of government he strived for."

Johnston said Hoffman would probably want to be remembered as a patriot who worked to better the nation as a whole.

"I think he felt the most patriotic thing he could do was to continually challenge America to be better," she said.

Senior Nancy Callahan remembered a quote once penned in a book written by Hoffman: "The spirit of the movement is victory or death."

"He's got death now — but did he have victory?" Callahan said. But, she said, "I think he was victorious in continuing the effort to reconstruct the nation. He was one man who could work for the larger cause while working for the smaller causes, like the trial at UMass."

Mall fashions to remain the same this year

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

It's that time again.

Time for many of us to reach into the recesses of our wallets and shell out what little money we have to replenish our spring wardrobes.

And what do the stores have to offer us this year?

The selection is pretty much the same as last year, according to Pam Toohey, assistant manager of The Weathervane, a clothing store in the Hampshire Mall.

"There's been no extreme transition," said Toohey. "Stonewashed jeans and clothes with emblems on them are still in style."

Senior Chris Rushton said he thinks the current trends are fine.

"I like to see what's in fashion," said Rushton. "I wear a lot of Jams [shorts] and tank tops [in the spring]."

However, other UMass students said they hate some of the current trends.

"Companies putting logos on clothes really annoys me," said UMass junior Jennifer Urban. "I don't want to pay to be their billboard."

Junior Tom Reilly said that surfer shorts really bother him. "We are 130 miles from the ocean here," he said.

So what are the options?

Bright colors, especially fuscia, neon green and orange are hot this year, according to Erin Martin and Sandi Sachs, employees at Ups 'N Downs, another clothing store at the mall.

Prints are a big item this year too, according to Chess King employee F.J. Ventere.

"People are buying a lot of busy-looking clothing this year," he said.

If students are looking for something different in pants, they may be seeing an increase in leg width, said Ventere.

Will this eventually lead to the return of bell-bottoms?

Ventere said he doesn't see this happening, but freshman Shawn Cotter said he would welcome it.

"I would wear them," he said. "Along with platform shoes, which I think will make a comeback."

Most students agreed with Urban, though, that if bell-bottoms returned they will "boycott" them.

Accessories, such as scarfs, suspenders, jewelry, and hair clips are always in style as well, she said.

Freshmen Genie Bush and Jessica Midi said they like to wear a lot of silver jewelry, including "ear clips and nose rings."

As far as fashion for the feet goes, most students said they look for a low price and comfort.

"The $5 white, flat sneakers from K-Mart are great," said Urban.

Although many students are annoyed by certain styles, most agree with freshman Marcello Antifonario that it's not really important to them what they wear.

Pointing to his black and white checkered pants, Antifonario said, "The only reason I have these is my parents insisted on buying me some clothes for school."

Some tricks they'll never learn.

If animals were responsible for their own birth control, there might not be a need to kill 13.5 million unwanted dogs and cats each year. That's the cost of not having your pet spayed or neutered. Fixed.

Even bringing a litter of puppies or kittens to an animal shelter is no guarantee they'll find a home before room has to be made for more.

Having your pet spayed or neutered is the only way to reduce the sad number of ownerless dogs and cats destroyed this year. And it will also increase your pet's chances of living a longer and healthier life. That responsibility is yours alone.

You'll never stop your pets from acting naturally. But if you love them, you'll have them fixed.

Talk to your veterinarian. Or contact us for a free information packet on birth control for your pet.

A problem caused by boredom

In regard to the front page article appearing on 4/10/89 entitled "PVTA Rowdiness Threatens Service," and unfortunate state of affairs is occurring that has resulted in abuse to bus drivers, passengers, and the bus itself. I believe, however, the fault does not lie so much in the riders, but in the restrictions placed on the students by the university, town, and housing services.

Jeff Grabelle

In other words, the main problem can be found in the fact that people 18-20 have very little to do on weekends and must resort to "searching" for parties. Since most off-campus complexes are not within walking distance to the residence halls, and a number of these same people do not have their cars up here, they must depend on the free public transportation of the PVTA. The students, who are just looking for something to do, may become the victims of university and town policy.

Since entering the university in the Fall of 1985, I have seen many students' liberties either restricted of totally removed, leaving the student little to do on a weekend besides go for ice cream, or a movie. Fraternity parties, once a haven for underage partiers, have become so restrictive due to town and university policy, that unless you are on a guest list, you as well forget about even trying to get in.

And as far as partying in the dorms, even people who are of age aren't allowed to drink in public space. So what is one to do except look for an off-campus party, if one isn't old enough to spend half of his/her night waiting in lines in town to get into bars? The answer is simple – either stay in and watch television all night, or risk driving drunk to parties, or ride the PVTA.

Granted, if you are not 21, you should not be drinking (it's the law plain and simple). I am not here advocating underage drinking, but this does not excuse the university or town from providing some kind of entertainment/alternative for the underaged on the weekends.

Why not have a dance club where 18-20 year olds can enter legally just to dance or hang out with their friends who may be of legal age (unlike some establishments where fake ID's are allowed)? If clubs are worried about underage drinking, maybe they should sue a bracelet or stamp system. This has been attempted in other college towns around the nation, and has had successful results.

Overall, instead of cancelling valuable bus services, I believe that the university or town must move to allow someone to provide some kind of service for underaged drinker, preferably close to the university. If this entertainment were provided on campus, then less people would have to travel on the buses. But if no alternative can be found to off-campus parties, then it appears that students will have to resort to driving – possibly drunk – back and forth to the complexes.

University and town policy is leading the PVTA to "just say no" to rowdiness on weekend service, and the students who are already limited in social activities available to them, will once again see liberties stripped away by the administration.

Some advice to radicals

On Tuesday, March 28, I attended the debate on abortion sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program. What I have to say here, however, has nothing to do with the issue of abortion. Neither did the debate. Or at least that's the way I'll remember it.

Eric Keisman

The debate, which I presumed would be a civilized display of concern and interest, turned out to be an opportunity for the pro-choice advocates to show me, and the rest of those in attendance, that they could be as rude, stubborn, and unwilling to listen to anyone else's ideas as the staff of the Minuteman. Not to say that every pro-choice person was like this, but the boos, hisses, and profanity shouted was not a demonstration of civilized, educated behavior. But wait! There's less! After their savior, Judy Goldsmith, made her closing remarks, easily half of the audience took their leave while Phylis Schlafly was making her closing statement. A demonstration of raw maturity and sophistication. I was truly impressed.

Unfortunately, such incidents are not isolated. Radicals, not mat. r what their affiliation, have a tendency to abandon common courtesy, the rights of others and all too often, the truth, for the sake of furthering their cause. It is for this reason that I have some realistic advice for all of you budding young radicals out there. First, make sure you know what you are talking about. And I mean make sure YOU know, not whoever organized the protest, or recruited you to hand out pamphlets. Go to the library (the big tall building in the middle of campus) and read, yes read about the subject. Find out the foundations for the opposing arguments and consider them with an open mind. You just might discover that there is more to the issue than meets the eye. There almost always is.

Next, tell the truth. Don't twist, manipulate, and misquote the facts to make them suitable to your cause. An example: Khadaffi was not make public enemy number one of protecting his country. He was made public enemy number one for providing sanctuary to the terrorist group that was responsible for gunning down innocent civilians in a Christmas airport massacre. Nobody likes to be lied to, and no one listens to a sensationalist. This is a good way to get your cause ignored.

Finally, calm down. No one ever reached an agreement by yelling accusations. People organizing a student tour de force all too often are of the mentality, "Yeah!! We're gonna make them take notice!" OK. So you went to a rally. You screamed. You cheered. You raised hell. Congratulation! You've been noticed. Now, try this. Get a petition. Get some signatures. Now, in a civilized manner, go present it, along with your ideas to a person of importance, or to the public. Whomever you like. Now, guess what. You've been heard. There is a difference. Which would you rather be, noticed, or listened to? I assure you, the latter will get you much further. You may even learn something abut the other argument that will change you mind, or at least make you reconsider.

If you must make a scene, go ahead. Put your fingers in your ears, jump up and down and yell, "I'm not listening!" People will treat you as you are acting. Like a child.

A useful transportation service

This is in response to the letter published in the Collegian on Tuesday, April 11, "UMass Makes Life Hard for Disabled." The writer of that letter complained that she "called the bus transit office one hour prior to her classes" and got only busy signals. From this, she concluded that the van service is "useless."

I would like to point out that the reason the phone line is constantly busy is because the van service is constantly busy and is far from useless. The Disabled Transportation Service here at UMass is one of the largest and most comprehensive services offered by any college or university in this country. We covered almost 53,000 miles last year and do up to 1600 rides a month. There are more than 50 people with permanent disabilities who use our van service regularly and up to 40 temporarily disabled people at a time who use the service for as little as a day or as long as several semesters.

We provide door-to-door transportation for doctors appointments, job interviews, food shopping and more, as well as to classes. The service is available from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. weekdays, and until 1:30 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights. All but two of our nineteen drivers and dispatchers are UMass students.

Yes, there are many buildings on campus that are very difficult or impossible for people with disabilities. And yes, the van service is not able to accommodate everyone's needs 100 percent of the time. However, planning ahead and calling in advance to arrange a needed ride frequently works wonders.

If Fabsik had called us even a few hours earlier, we would have had a chance to explain the system to her and schedule the rides that she needed. One hour's notice is completely unrealistic. I would suggest to Fabsik that blowing off steam by criticizing a system that she knows nothing about does little good for anyone but herself. Her energy would be better spent by lobbying for additional funding for the services on campus that work so hard to make a good education a real possibility for people with disabilities.

Abandon the outdated myths

Why is Rusty Denton so preoccupied with lesbians and gay men if he finds the subject so distasteful? As a lesbian, I simply would not bother to write article after article about what I presumed to be the lifestyle of heterosexuals. Denton must feel that he benefits in some way from publicizing myths about lesbians and gay men as though these myths were scientific facts.

C'mon Rusty, even the American Psychological Association abandoned those outdated myths more than a decade ago. It would be helpful to the university community if you would stick to subjects that you know a little something about – I, for one, will be looking forward to it.

Escalation of senseless school-yard violence

Recently, a high school student in Worcester died from being stabbed in the throat. Both he and his killer, another high school student of the same age, had fought previously before taking their aggressions to the school's hallways.

Both knew they would "have it out" once and for all during the day. One carried a knife and the other wielded a stick. Needless to say, the stick didn't help very much, as the wielder was eventually killed.

But what would have happened if the stick-wielder had brought a machete or a gun? There would have been a different teenager in a casket.

What happened to the days when people fought on the same terms, without weapons? When fists flew until someone stepped in and broke it up?

At Oklahoma University, more than one drunken, gun-wielding football player has risked everything he worked for because he pulled the trigger.

This hostile and violent aggression that people possess has led them to act in ways they regret later. In order to prove a point or save face, there is no telling how far a person's temper will go, nor does it allow for what the opponent will do when an apparent threat becomes real. This is when people should realize that although it is sometimes necessary to fight, it usually solves nothing.

E. Douglas Banks

A classic example of useless violence is the gang-related shootings in area like Roxbury and Dorchester. Every day the Boston Globe has and article describing the death of another fourteen year old. These teenagers, who are afraid to walk to school, seem to have just as much to worry about once they do arrive safely. With all the violence that surrounds teens in some neighborhoods, it becomes clear that they feel safer to "fight fire with fire." The result is knives and guns being found in lockers and back pockets.

The real question is, why must this senseless escalation of violence occur? If you ask someone at the high school level their reasons for carrying a weapon, they might say, "protection." But who is being protected?

As a student, I was involved in a dispute between a close friend and a neanderthal athlete. The neanderthal never seemed to have enough cash, so he beat on the weaker students to pay for his lunch.

After a week of senseless brutality, we got wise and made alliance with larger, more muscular friends. It didn't take long for the "bully" to get the picture and leave the defenseless alone. However, we were lucky because it is just as possible that he could have entered school with a weapon to increase his chance of winning, causing one more school-yard statistic.

It's clear that one death does not push an end to school-yard violence, but would one hundred deaths? Probably not. People will always fight, and the easiest way to win a fight is to be "one-up" on the opponent. The escalation is like a never ending ladder, with both rivals striving to get the upper-hand, when eventually, the knife or the bullet will be buried in someone's flesh.

Hunter reveals the hard realities of love

By THOMAS H. GAGNON
Collegian Staff

Between Home And The Hunter
Curtain Theater
April 11

Between Home and the Hunter, by Dudley Stone, takes an intense, at times frightening, but always intelligent look at three friends' love triangle and the impact it has on their relationships with one another.

Although it is under two hours, the tension between the characters makes the play seem longer— in a good way, thanks to the carefully constructed story, excellent performances by all three actors, an evocative setting, and clever staging.

Angie, David, and Stevie are three friends. Angie (Pamela Karp) is a suicidal would-be writer. She loves both David, a seemingly sensitive loner, and Stevie, a seemingly carefree jock (Anthony Maestrone, Michael Riseberg). The story follows the changing relationships of the three friends to an uncertain conclusion.

Despite the loose appearance of the play's episodic structure, the story is tightly constructed. In a series of episodes, playwright Dudley Stone, a student in the UMass Theater department's M.F.A. program, builds the tension between the characters, at the same time that he subtly reveals their complex inner nature.

The action reaches a surprising but believable climax and ends, appropriately, without resolution. In his dialogue and characterization, Stone mixes the banal and the sophisticated in intriguing ways. We hear ordinary exchanges ('I want to help you.' 'You can't.' 'I can if you let me.') and then we hear dramatic monologues, in which the character uses highly charged and often symbolic language.

The characters are presented to us first as types— jock, loner, tormented artist— but by the end of the play they have emerged as complex human beings. Although a little schematic, the character transformations that occur are convincing and give emotional depth to the play.

One major reason for the success of the characterization is that all three performances carry conviction. Particularly outstanding is Anthony Maestrone, who both evokes and provokes strong emotion as the high-strung David.

Pamela Karp, as Angie, has to cover the widest emotional range. Although she makes the emotional transitions smoothly, she is somewhat better at portraying Angie's insecurity and anger than her love for the two men. With the least complex part, Michael Riseberg manages to convey an undercurrent of deep feeling in Stevie.

The minimal setting reflects the characters' insecurity. The staging makes good use of the setting, which consists of two platforms, sparsely furnished, and an open space between them. In one effective scene, David is standing on one platform, Stevie on the other, and Angie in the space between them, and they are coaxing and deceiving each other from their separate spaces. This staging conveys both their individual isolation and the complexity of their relationships to one another.

Between Home and the Hunter can be hard to watch at times, but the difficulty is well worth it.

realism, and modernism in relation to the Beat movement, he said, "It's all one relay — each movement descended and integrated with into the next."

Ginsberg said unfortunately the Beat movement, symbolized by "anti-modern society" poetry that asks its readers to work with the subconscious and spirituality through art and literature, may be overcome by conservativism.

"But where there's writhing flesh, there's hope," he said of the movement's chances.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

CALVIN AND HOBBES By BILL WATTERSON

I'VE BEEN THINKING. SUPPOSE I GROW UP TO BE ONE OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST MEN OF ALL TIME. SUPPOSE MY NAME WILL BE AN INSPIRATION TO HUMANITY FOR EONS TO COME!
WHAT WILL THE HISTORY BOOKS SAY? THEY'LL SAY, "MUCH OF HIS CHILDHOOD WAS SPENT UNWILLINGLY IN THE BATHTUB."
WHAT AN INDIGNITY THIS BATH IS! IS THIS SITUATION WORTHY OF ONE OF THE GREATEST MEN OF ALL TIME?!?
MY LIKELY HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE IS A TERRIBLE BURDEN.
WOULD YOU RATHER THEY SAID YOUR CHILDHOOD WAS DIRTY AND SMELLY?

DOONESBURY By GARRY TRUDEAU

JOANIE, WHAT YOU HAVE TO UNDERSTAND IS THERE'S A LOT OF ANGER ON THIS WARD FOR MOST PATIENTS, AIDS IS A STIGMA ON TOP OF A STIGMA. SOCIETY HAS YET TO COME TO TERMS WITH IT
ANDY USES HUMOR TO SOFTEN THE RAGE HE FEELS AND TO HELP HIM FACE THE ABYSS. I ENCOURAGE IT, BECAUSE AIDS CARE IS ABOUT HELPING PEOPLE COPE, HELPING THEM DIE WITH DIGNITY...
EVERY DAY I GO IN TO SEE ANDY, AND HE MAKES SOME TERRIBLE JOKE ABOUT HIS LESIONS, AND I PLAY STRAIGHT MAN, AND WE'RE BOTH SCREAMING INSIDE, BUT IT'S BETTER THAN GOING MAD.
AND ON YOUR DAYS OFF?
I UNWIND. HOLD UP CONVENIENCE STORES. THAT SORT OF THING.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Allow nothing to stand in your way today. You will enjoy good luck in a new love relationship. Reserve some time for acquiring specialized knowledge through study and research. Diversify your investments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Go ahead and expose a secret fear to the family circle. Loved ones offer reassurance. Better communication will solidify family ties. Your ability to concentrate improves and so does your cash flow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Savor a victory, but do not use it as an opportunity to push others around or you will pay the consequences. Travel and romance go hand-in-hand today. This is not a good day to take risks.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Those in authority see that you are doing a good job. New rewards are on the way. Someone may come into your life, turning everything topsy-turvy. Your loyalty wins you big bucks.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have never feared higher-ups before so do not give in now. A very good day for revealing your thoughts. You will end up in the drivers seat if you hold your ground.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get serious about acquiring specialized knowledge. Partnerships prosper. Now is not the best time to change jobs. Act aware of your worth and important people will take notice. A promotion is possible.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Loved ones are willing to help you in any way they can. Do not try to force decisions on them or you could have a rebellion on your hands. Use sweet reason.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An important financial matter deserves your personal attention. You find a new relationship both challenging and fulfilling. Your gift for bringing opposing parties together is a tremendous asset. Use it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Repay a few favors before going off for the weekend. Your travel plans may have to be altered due to unexpected developments. Do things that have a noble purpose. Generosity wins admiration.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your emotional detachment works to your advantage in a family matter. Relax and let others see you as you really are. New eating habits help you gain weight. Watch the scale.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be more self-reliant and you will be able to achieve almost anything you desire. Sometimes you say things that you do not remember saying later on. Check your records if challenged.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Those in psychology or other types of counseling enjoy special success now. Focus on earning a newcomer's trust. Your eye for color serves you well today.

From there, Wanner settled in a bit (warmed up, more appropriately), holding firm through a third inning bases-loaded threat, before allowing the day's final run in the fifth on three consecutive singles.

The season's series between these two clubs now stands at 2-1 in favor of UConn, but isn't over yet. Both teams will travel to Garden City, NY this weekend, joining Penn St. and nationally ranked South Carolina at the "Adelphi Tournament."

ed as Comeau drove him in with his first hit of the day, a double, and then scored himself after going to third on Steve Kern's grounder to second and making the final stretch on Bright's sacrifice.

Minuteman coach Mike Stone was very happy with the performance of his players yesterday, citing an all-around effort as the cause.

Said Stone, "We played a couple of notches above the way we've been playing lately. Things started to click a little bit easier for us."

STORRS, Conn. — Both teams, of course, were playing on the same sluggish field, under the same sunless sky and against the same bitter wind. But only one team seemed to mind, as the University of Massachusetts softball squad dropped a pair to the University of Connecticut yesterday afternoon.

Minutewomen drop a pair to UConn

The Minutewomen, now 9-12, fell prey to mental lapses and frozen bats on the way to their 1-0, 2-0 winless afternoon. UConn, which entered the game as the top ranked team in the Northeast, extended its season record to 14-8.

"You can't use anything for an excuse," cautioned UMass coach Elaine Sortino, "it can't be the cold because the other team is playing in the same weather. But I felt we were a half a step off everything we did today."

In the opener, the Minutewomen stranded seven baserunners, leaving the tying run on second base at game's end and the bases loaded in both the fourth and sixth innings.

The Huskies capitolized on their one true threat to UMass' Holly Aprile (5-7), as Jennifer Tyler led the home half of the third inning with a sharp single up the middle, then moved to second on a single. Vicki Bartolluci eventually blooped a single to right under the outstreched arm of fielder Bonnie Schilling to load the bases.

UMass second baseman Catherine Pugliese then robbed Julie Sherman of some fat RBI numbers with a diving stab of her ground ball headed up the middle; Tyler scored easily on the play. Pugliese keyed an inning ending double play on the next pitch, sealing the score at 1-0.

In the top half of the seventh, UConn starting pitcher Sharon Arnold fanned Aprile on a fastball across the outside half of the plate, as UMass's Lauren Rubin — the potential tying run — watched from second base.

"We had big poeple at the plate in key situations, and we just couldn't get the hits," described Sortino.

The second game was more of the same, as even the sun's brief, but well received, appearance could do little to thaw the Minutewomen's bats. UMass managed just two hits and five baserunners against UConn's Sue Rybczk (7-4) — Pugliese was the only Minutewoman to see second base in the contest, reaching on an error and then advancing on a single in the third inning.

UMass teams fare differently on the diamond

The UMass softball team was dumped in both games of its doubleheader yesterday against UConn.

The Huskies jumped on UMass starter Chris Wanner (3-5) in the bottom of the first inning, scoring two runs on a bases-loaded double by Chris Wajda. A sharp retrieval of the ball from deep right caught Westra at the DURHAM, N.H. — If the University of Massachusetts baseball team beat Boston University Wednesday in spite of how it played, then it beat the University of New Hampshire yesterday because of how it played.

The UMass pitching trio of Jerry Creamer, Jeff

Baseball squashes New Hampshire, 11-2

Richardson and Don Strange combined to allow only two runs on six hits with eight strikeouts between them. This, combined with sharp fielding on the part of the Minutemen and a lack of it on the part of the Wildcats helped UMass to an 11-2 blowout.

UMass led early after Dave Edwards (2-for-3, four runs scored) singled, took second on Drew Seccafico's fielder's choice, third on Drew Comeau's grounder and went home on a wild pitch. UNH answered in the bottom of the first with a run from Mike Varano, but UMass took the lead for good in the third.

Tom Murray singled and went to third on a single by Glenn DiSarcina down the right field line. As DiSarcina stole second, the throw went into center field, allowing Murray to score and DiSarcina to reach third. Seccafico then delivered DiSarcina for the first of his three RBIs on the day.

UMass made it 4-1 in the fourth when Murray singled, took third on DiSarcina's double and went home on an error by the center fielder. By this time Creamer had settled in and was pitching a near-perfect game. The Wildcats did not get their other run until the sixth inning when Dave Stewart singled, and came around on singles by Jim Lucci and Sean Ashley.

That would be the end of the scoring for New Hampshire, while UMass added insult to injury in the later innings. The Minutemen added a run in the seventh on a triple by Edwards and a Seccafico sacrifice fly, and two more in the eighth without hitting the ball out of the infield.

Steve Kern walked, and Brian Bright followed with a grounder to third. The throw to first went into right field, and when the first baseman retrieved it and threw home there was no one there. This allowed not only Kern but Bright to score.

The Minutemen added three in the ninth to close the scoring. Edwards drew a walk from Wildcat pitcher Scott MacDonald, then stole second and crossed the plate on Seccafico's single to left. Seccafico soon follow-

Lax teams in action this weekend

Gorillas want to make a claim with 9th-ranked Yale

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow, as procrastinators frantically rip their hair out while trying to file their income tax claims at the last moment, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse will be looking to file a different type of claim.

Despite a 6-1 record, UMass hasn't been highly regarded by the experts whose primary purpose is to compile the weekly rankings. The 13th-ranked Gorillas will look to improve their stock as they travel to New Haven, Conn. to face ninth-ranked Yale, in what may be the team's biggest test to date.

This isn't a new scenario for the Gorillas. Last year the Ivy Leaguers came to Amherst sitting pretty on a 9-0 record and a sixth ranking. UMass took note, then spit in their face while running up an impressive 20-13 win at the Hill.

This year the Elis won't be any easier to beat. They currently sit at 6-2 with their setbacks being to Navy (12-6) and Penn (14-8), ranked fifth and eighth this week, respectively.

"They're a good team. Obviously they're having a good year," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "I didn't think they were as strong as last year, but they're balanced."

Yale can also boast an 11-10 win over Cornell, the team responsible for the only UMass loss, but had to rally from a 7-2 halftime deficit to beat Brown 9-8 Wednesday. UMass handled Brown, 15-6 just nine days ago.

But enough with comparisons, tomorrow it's just head-to-head. Garber saw the Elis beat Princeton 10-8, and assistant coach Steve Kirkpatrick scouted the Brown win. Both agree the teams match up closely.

"They're strong at every position," Garber said. "They didn't use much depth [in the Brown win], and even though they won it in the fourth quarter, I thought they were very tired."

The Gorillas, with their depth at attack and in the midfield, will look to exploit that.

"It should be a good match-up, but we've got a little more depth and team speed," Garber said.

UMass will also have to avoid cheap penalties. The Elis run an effective man-up offense, and are adept at cashing in on the opposition's mistakes.

"A team like that, if we eliminate the man-down we should win handily," Garber said.

UMass can keep in mind that it hasn't lost a game to a team from New England in its last 22 efforts. The last team to do it — Yale, back in 1985.

A very busy sched: All UMass teams in action over long weekend

Due to space restrictions in today s paper, we are unable to preview all of the UMass sports teams. The following, however, is a quick glance at this weekend's action.

Saturday, April 15

Men's track: UMass heads to Durham N.H. this Saturday to take part in a quad-meet against Maine, UNH, and New England Indoor Champs URI.
Women's track: The Minutewomen will take a little trip to Northampton to participate in the Smith Invitational this Saturday. Umass will be one of seven teams in the field.
Rugby: UMass will take part in the Providence Tournament this weekend against currently unknown opponents.
Men's and Women's Crew: UMass will head to Hartford Saturday to face Trinity College in a sink oar swim match. Last weekend the crew teams rowed against Wesleyan, where the women won and the men lost.
Men's Lax: At Yale [See adjacent story].
Women's Lax: Also on the road: At UNH [See adjacent story].
Baseball: At Rhode Island on both Saturday and Sunday [See story above].
Softball: At Adelphi on both Saturday and Sunday [See story above].

Sunday, April 16

Men's tennis Winners of their only two matchés this season, the Minutemen will play Hartford University Sunday (12 a.m.)
Women's tennis Despite playing only one mtach thus far, the Minutewomen head to Penn State for the A-10s on Sunday.

Gazelles to mature a little more at UNH

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Okay, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team played well on Wednesday against the No. 2 team in the nation (Harvard University).

But still, no win. The Gazelles, 1-6 have not won since March 19. They are currently on a six game skid, yet the loss to Harvard may have been a positive turning point in the season for this young team.

"I thought we played the best we played all year," UMass coach Patti Bossio said.

Harvard coach Carole Kleinfelder said: "I think UMass was one of our tougher opponents. They effectively rattled us," after Kleinfelder's team had escaped with an 8-4 victory at Totman Field Wednesday.

What UMass showed against Harvard was a sign of maturity. With six freshmen in the starting lineup, this team can only get better with time.

"We played with the best of them," Bossio said. "And we didn't fall apart and we played relaxed and we finally took control of what we were doing."

They know what it's like to lose in the college ranks. The next step is for them to learn what it takes to win. Tomorrow, the Gazelles will have a chance to hopefully find out what that winning feeling is like when they travel to Durham, N.H. for a date with the University of New Hampshire (1 p.m.).

As was the case on Wednesday though, the Gazelles will be the underdogs. UNH is also a national power at 5-1 on the season and the Wildcats also have a more explosive attack than Harvard's.

Anna Hill has scored 19 goals for UNH, Liz Brickley 11 to go with nine assists, and Lynne Abbott 13.

"I think we can carry it over to New Hampshire," Bossio said of her team's solid play Wednesday. "It should give us a little bit more confidence."

50 rally against pornography

Protesters call for boycott of 'adult magazines'

By KATERI WALSH
Collegian Corespondent

About 50 people, many carrying signs and banners, walked through downtown Amherst Saturday afternoon in a "March Against Pornography."

Chanting "Support women's liberation, not sexual exploitation," and "No more porn, no more rape, no more phallic woman-hate," the marchers paused in front of the Amherst Newsroom to protest the shop's sale of what the protesters consider pornographic materials.

The North Pleasant Street store, which sells more than 80 different "adult magazine" titles, has been the site of several protests by local anti-pornography groups.

"They have every right to state their opinion," said Donna Rose, store manager.

Cars passing the marchers beeped their horns and some drivers gave thumbs-up signs. Other motorists yelled obscenities in passing.

In a rally at the Amherst Common following the march, Helen Harrison, a member of the Coalition of Nonoppressive Sexuality, organizers of the march and rally, called pornography "sexual images in literature that exploit, dehumanize, or slander women."

The coalition opposes state censorship because it considers the state "complicit — even active — in the oppression of women," and therefore opposes increasing state power, according to a flyer distributed by the group.

"Any action against pornography must further empower women — not those already in power,' the flier stated. 'Protesting pornography is not an act of censorship, but an exercise of First Amendment Rights."

Jennifer Fasulo, a member of the coalition and a University of Massachusetts student, said the anti-pornography movement does not advocate violence in trying to stop the sale of pornographic materials.

"We would like to see people's awareness raised around the issue of pornography and have people realize how damaging it is," Fasulo said.

She said she would like to make pornography unprofitable by organizing boycotts against stores selling pornography, but added the group has no pickets scheduled.

Bonducci's gives up cigarettes

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Without changing a physical detail, Bonducci's will unviel a whole new atmoshpere when it opens for business this morning.

As of today, smoking is prohibited at the North Pleasant Street cafe. Employees and clientele of the Amherst cafe yesterday had a mixed reaction to the change.

"The decision was pretty straightforward, resulting from the frustration over not being able to control the smoke," said George "Jeb" Bailey, owner of Bonducci's. "We have tried having half the cafe for non-smokers, but the room is just too small. We can't ventilate the space effectively."

Bonducci's in Northampton will continue to allow smoking on one side of the room, Bailey said. But the Amherst cafe has lost business because of the problem with smoke, he said.

"There's a portion of the clientele, most of whom are smokers, who tend to sit around for a long time smoking, but not drinking coffee or buying anything," he said. "I'm in business, and I can't pay bills if people come in here for two hours and only have one cup of coffee."

"I think it's good for the cafe. When you work here for six or seven hours at a time, the smoke is insufferable," said Sarah Scott, an employee behind the counter at the Amherst cafe. "There's poor ventilation in here, and we can't open the door because it's a health violation."

But not every employee supported the decision.

"I smoke and work here, and I think this is a big drag," said Chris Morris. "It's going to be hard for Bonducci's to be a cafe without smoking. Myself, I came here for the atmosphere, and now it's going to change."

Employees agreed that the new smoking policy is partly aimed at the group which "sits around for three hours at a time, and only buys one cup of coffee."

"Maybe now the high school element and the 'phudsters' won't hang around here as much," said Amerin Falk, also a Bonducci's employee.

Falk said phudsters are a group of five or six Amherst locals who hang around Bonducci's for hours every day, but only buy a cup of coffee.

A majority of clientele voiced objection to the policy. Employees said a common remark from customers was, "You guys are gong to lose a lot of business."

"If they tell me to stop smoking, I'll go to another place, most likely to Classe' Cafe," said John-Paul Maynard, as he took a drag from his hand-rolled cigarette. "I'd say more than half of the people who come here smoke. There's going to be a lot of hassles. I say the cafe will lose approximately ten percent of it's business."

"I'm totally psyched. This is another small victory in the war against pollution," said Rob Johnson, a UMass senior in the Inquiry Program.

Conservatives unhappy with judiciary

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

In the aftermath of Thursday night's hearing of charges against members of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, two of the defendants have accused the board overseeing the case of bias toward the plaintiffs, Robb Smith and Ted Chambers.

W. Greg Rothman, who is charged with verbal harassment, assault and violation of civil rights, and Doug Dratch, who is accused of verbal harassment and jumping on a car, have claimed that members of the judicial board, including the chairperson, repeatedly refused to listen to Rothman's testimony.

At one point, Rothman said, she rolled her eyes at him as he was making his statement.

The chairperson of the board could not be reached because Celia Lyon, co-procedural advisor for the hearing, refused to give board members' names to the Collegian, pending approval by the area coordinator.

Dratch agreed that the board was unfair. "They were not willing to look at the evidence," he said, adding that the use of the plaintiffs' newspaper, The Liberator, was relevant in the defense testimony.

Chambers did not agree with Dratch's contention, saying, "That's absolutely absurd. Just because he (Rothman) is conservative, it doesn't give him the right to terrorize people."

During his closing statement, Rothman compared his situation to that of members of the civil rights movement of the 1960s, who were arrested on trumped-up charges.

"The comparison to Martin Luther King's plight is . . . offensive. I don't see him as having a plight," Smith said.

Rothman was not available for comment yesterday.

Smith, when asked about whether the defendants would be punished, said, "I would be very surprised (if they got off)."

Dratch said he was optimistic about the outcome, saying that if they lost, they would successfully appeal.

Family flees apartment fire

A fire swept through a two-story residence in Southwood Apartments yesterday causing smoke, heat and water damage, said Amherst Fire Department Spokesperson Paul Lalonde.

Lalonde said there were no injuries. Four engines, a ladder and a squad car were sent to 32 Southwood at 1:56 p.m., he said. Firefighters were on the scene for a total of 93 minutes, he said.

Fire Chief Victor Zumbruski said the fire was caused by careless disposal of smoking materials.

Pint of order: Ivies square off

NORTHAMPTON — A Yale University student advocated a reinstatement of prohibition against alcohol Sunday — as he argued for his assigned side in the final round of the American Parliamentary Debate Association's national championship at Smith College.

"What appears to be an individual choice is really a societal choice and the government is responsible to protect its citizens from behavior that is unavoidable," said John Wortheim, one of two members on the Yale debate team. Yale was battling Harvard for the championship.

Matthew Wolf, the other Yale debater, said alcohol is addictive. Once people are addicted they no longer have a choice, he said.

"That's why the government prohibits cocaine and not credit cards," he said.

The debate was set up with Yale representing the government, Harvard the opposition, and some 250 Smith College audience members as parliament, according to Donna Marsh, a member of the Smith College debate team who helped organize the event.

According to Marsh, the "government" wanted to convince the parliament that the United States should reinstate prohibition. Two members of the "opposition" wanted to convince the group to retain the status quo, Marsh said.

Harvard's Patrick Bannan told the crowd that alcohol always has been, and always will be, part of the American life.

"Drinking a beer at a football or baseball game is part of the American culture," he said. "If this law is passed wine tasters will have to ask themselves, 'Is sipping this glass of '29 Burgundy worth going to jail for?'"

Bannon said he was brought up as a Catholic, and "Wine at church would be illegal — which would violate freedom of religion. How would they celebrate Mass? There would be unemployed priests wandering the country."

Harvard's Nicholas Alpers said the "government" was saying citizens have a choice as long as it doesn't affect society.

"Maybe choosing not to bite your fingernails doesn't, but most other decisions people make do affect society," he said.

He said the "government" assumes that people will stop drinking, but shows no proof they will.

"Cocaine and heroin are banned today and the 'government' can't control the use and supply of either," he said.

Wolf said because alcohol will be more difficult to obtain,
many people will use it.

"When you turn 21 it becomes a lot easier to drink," he said. "If the drinking age were lower people probably would have drank more when they were younger."

Wolf said if alcohol is removed from society industry production will rise and prices will go down.

He said the "government" makes laws to protect the people and should not concern itself with enforcement,

"We have laws for murder that some people ignore," he said. "People are murdered every day. Should we get rid of the laws?"

Bannan said that enacting prohibition would cause the closing of breweries and the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

"Who's to say that if production does go up prices will go down," he said. "How do we know that the rich won't get richer and the poor poorer."

The "parliament" sided with the "opposition," 151-85, and Harvard was voted the champion by the Smith College judges.

Candidate protest has CAG election unsettled

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The fate of the Commuter Area Government presidency remains uncertain in the wake of an angry protest filed last week by co-candidates Robb Smith and Ted Chambers who claim "negative campaigning" and alleged personal vendettas caused their defeat.

The pair, who were defeated by co-presidents-elect Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes by a four-vote margin, said yesterday they are calling for a new election.

Smith, who is now acting-CAG president, said misleading posters that were circulated on and off campus damaged their campaign for the presidency.

The posters alleged the Smith and Chambers would halt spring concerts at the University.

"I think we would have won," if the posters had not been distributed, Smith said. He added that the allegations were unfounded because it is the Union Program Council, not the Commuter Area Government, that oversees spring pond concerts.

Rumors were also circulated claiming that money allocated for LBGA festivities were draining concert funds, Smith said, adding that all allegations were false.

"They were playing on homophobic attitudes," he said. "It's pretty rotten."

Smith maintained that he has proved his advocacy for concerts by giving $8,000 for Eastside concerts and about $11,000 for comedian Dennis Miller, who performed at the Fine Arts Center

Speedy cartoonist tells her own colorful tale

By RONALD AGRELLA
Collegian Correspondent

Pauline Comanor, dubbed the "world's fastest cartoonist," displayed her record-breaking talent Saturday at the Hampshire Mall.

Comanor claims the ability to draw almost any character or person in a matter of seconds. Her caricatures include Popeye, Betty Boop, Laurel and Hardy, and a wide array of her own creations, including Chunky Monkey and Cookie Clown.

"People use cartoons to get away from life's pressures, when they need to escape for a while," she said. "Cartoons are timeless."

Comanor has brought her "Cartoon-In" show to mall audiences across the United States for more than 15 years, she said.

"I think of an audience as a person I like to meet," she said.

The road to cartooning began for Comanor when she won several art awards at Philadelphia High School. At 15, she said she began teaching cartooning in Gimbles Department Store in Philadelphia.

The following year, she said her work was discovered by Max Fleischer, owner of Fleischer Studios, a division of Paramount Pictures in New York. Fleischer, who once worked with Walt Disney, invited Comanor to his studios, where she became his protege, making public appearances for him and the studio, she said.

Comanor later became an animator for the studio, receiving instruction from artists who designed the cartoon character Popeye.

"It was difficult at first," she said. "At the time, it was a world where girls were not considered good artists."

Television also sought her talents, she said, and Comanor became a "celebrity,"

Advocate for homeless: Situation is urgent

By JENNIFER GARVIN
Collegian Correspondent

Americans have stereotyped the homeless at a time when they should "act like those people are our brothers and sisters, mothers and fathers," an activist for the homeless said last week at Amherst College.

"Have some sense of urgency about what's going on around you," Mitch Snyder, a member of the Committee for Creative Nonviolence, told about 100 people in Johnson Chapel.

Snyder said he left his Park Avenue career and home in 1969 to become an activist for the homeless. In 1970 he helped form the committee, which runs a soup kitchen in Washington and a shelter for the homeless. The committee now claims more than 50 volunteers.

News coverage of the homeless and public opinion polls suggest homelessness is an issue at the top of the nation's agenda, Snyder said. However, the numbers are lower in government statistics than in reality, he said.

This reduces pressure on the government to do something, he added.

Snyder said just because the government doesn't count the homeless, doesn't mean they aren't there.

"You can't step over the broken bodies of your neighbors without implications," he said.

Snyder said people have stereotypes of the homeless as "dirty, lazy, drunken bums that are homeless by choice."

"Nobody lives that way because they want to," he said. "They're comforting stereotypes," but inaccurate.

Snyder said most homeless people are unemployed or unqualified for anything other than minimum wage work, veterans, single women with children and the mentally disabled. He said the United States has growing numbers of homeless because of unemployment, cuts in affordable housing, and the closing of mental hospitals without back-up housing.

Within 15 years, Snyder warned, another 16 to 17 million people will be without a home, many of them children, unless there are "massive infusions of aid."

"We have to act like those people are our brothers and sisters, mothers and fathers," he said.

In the fall of 1980 Snyder hit the streets of Washington, taking up residence over a heat grate until spring. He recalled a particularly cold night, when he was talking to a police officer near Lafayette Park and a man walked in front of them, took off his shoe, and smashed a window in a nearby building.

His motive, Snyder said, was to be arrested so he could spend the night in jail instead of freezing to death. The scene occurred 50 feet away from the Washington monument, he said, and with a turn of the head one could see the White House.

"That contradiction was most difficult to swallow," he said.

Global festival feeds, educates

SOUTH HADLEY — About 350 students, faculty and area residents had a chance to eat, drink and be merry Saturday, as the International Club at Mount Holyoke College sponsored its sixth annual Festival of Diversity.

People attending the festival walked along tables divided by regions of the world, and filled their plates with everything from Jamaican saltfish to Scottish shortbread. Along with the variety of food, the 21 countries represented offered native songs, dance and poetry.

Lavinia Salmon, coordinator of the festival, said all of the food was prepared by students in the International Club, and the reaction by those in the audience was favorable.

"The people were amazed by the food," she said, adding that "the festival is the best way to make people aware of the many countries that are represented."

The performances, also put on by the students, followed the food presentation. Featured were dances from Pakistan, Nepal, and the Phillipines, songs from India, Czechoslovakia, Japan and Sweden, and poetry from Holland and England. The performances ended with a "Song of Unity," in which the audience particiapated.

Student volunteers clean to raise funds for charity

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

About 50 UMass students rolled up their sleeves and held a spring cleaning to raise money for the homeless and hungry over the weekend.

The volunteers cleaned up four community centers in Northampton and Amherst last Saturday.

The cleanup crew raised over $1,500 for the hungry and the homeless, according to Stephen Hurley, hunger relief coordinator of the UMass chapter of MassPIRG.

The volunteers painted, raked leaves, and yardwork at the Amherst Center for Children, the Amherst Shelter for Adolescents, the Unitarian Society of Amherst, and the Tri-county Youth Program, based in Northampton.

The Hunger Cleanup was organized locally by students from MassPIRG and the UMass Hunger Task Force. The event was part the national Fifth Annual Hunger cleanup sponsored by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger.

Half of the money raised Saturday will be given to the Amherst Survival Center and the Western Massachusetts Food Bank, the other half will go to the National Campaign Against Hunger, said Mark Sciarrrotta, co-coordinator of the UMass Hunger Task Force.

"The Hunger Cleanup is similar to a walk-a-thon, but instead of walking, we did work to help the community. We were sponsored for the hours we cleaned," Hurley said. "The Hunger Cleanup goes one step further than walk-a-thons, it raises money, but at the same time, work for the community is done on the spot."

"It was very successful, we raised three times more money than we did last year," Hurley said. "The fact that half of the money goes to the homeless and the hungry in this area has a big impact, because when the weather is warm, people forget that there are still homeless out there who suffer no matter what the weather is like."

ASK US

Question: What is a dental dam and what is it used for?

Answer: If this were a dental column we would describe how this product is used in dentistry (its original purpose), however the same very thin 5-inch by 5-inch rubber-like sheet is used to practice safer sex. The dam is placed over a woman's vulva (vaginal opening and surroundings) during oral sex and during any oral-anal contact. This is done in order to protect primarily against passing an STD (sexually transmitted disease) through vaginal fluids and feces. Dental dams can be purchased at the University Health Services Pharmacy, but not in area pharmacies. If you don't have a dam, plastic wrap cut to the proper size or a latex condom slit up the side with the end cut off can create a similar barrier.

Question: Would I know if I had a sexually transmitted disease?

Answer: It is possible that you might not know if you have a sexually transmitted disease. This is possible for a couple of reasons. The first is that some sexually transmitted diseases may not exhibit symptoms. the second reason is that symptoms may be present but go undetected. This is especially the case in females since symptoms may not be obvious because they are inside the vagina. Some symptoms that may indicate a person has an STD may include: a burning sensation when urinating, an unusual discharge from the penis or vagina, strong unusual odors, uncontrollable itching, rashes or raised tissue in the areas of sexual contact (including in the mouth). These are but a few of the symptoms of STDs. If you want more information regarding STDs, you can go to the Health Services Health Education Division and pick up a series of handouts that describe the various sexually transmitted diseases in more detail.

BLACK AFFAIRS

The Black experience in Britain:

The immigration debate

Prof. Stephen Small

Editors Note: The following is the fourth in a series of articles to provide a historical analysis of Blacks in Britain and their relationship to Blacks in America.

STEPHEN SMALL
Special to the Collegian

Sometimes the essentials of a complex relationship can be captured in a slogan. Between the 1950s and 1970s, when Black people migrated to Britain in unprecedented numbers various pieces of immigration and 'race relations' legislation were introduced. Though they are remarkably complex, both sets of legislation are united in a common theme.

A popular phrase developed in the 1960s that captured this relationship and revealed the "Catch 22" situation facing Black people: "Love thy neighbor... who shouldn't be here in the first place!"

The immigration legislation was designed to keep non-whites out of the country. The "race relations" legislation was designed to promote racial harmony for those already there. But there was a major contradiction because the very presence of Blacks was defined as a problem. The consequences of this contradiction reverberate throughout the 1980s.

Prior to 1962 there was one passport shared by all citizens of the United Kingdom and colonies. Today, there are three: British Citizen, British Overseas Citizen and British Dependent Territories Citizen. Only British Citizens retain the right of entry, work and settlement. Many of those who possess the last type of passport are stateless.

These distinctions are based on the idea of "patriality," or closeness to the UK. "Patrials" are people who have a parent or grandparent born or naturalized in the UK. all the rest are "Non-patrials." Patrials" can come and go as they please. Non-patrials, cannot. The vast majority of patrials are White. The majority of non-patrials are non-White. If it sounds remarkably like the grandfather clause of the 1890s in the US south, that's because it is!

The effects of the legislation have been discriminatory, disruptive and divisive. It is not uncommon for a Black family to have members that each possess different type of passport. Some of them free to come and go, others not so.

While the immigration legislation was primarily aimed at stopping minority men, minority women have suffered most. West Indian women numbered highly among the early migrants, settling in Britain, locating work and sending for their families. Wives have been prevented from bringing in husbands, and the legitimacy of marriages has been questioned beyond all reasonable measure. Initially marriages were presumed genuine until the immigration service demonstrated otherwise; now they re presumed false until the couple proves otherwise. With much discretion left to officials, this has often been impracticable.

Indian women have been subjected to the greatest humiliation. In 1979 it was revealed that Indian women who came for "arranged marriages" were being medically inspected by the immigration officials to ensure they were virgins. These "Virginity Tests" were immediately terminated once they became public knowledge.

In the face of adversity, and even as they face the double discrimination of racism and sexism, minority women continue to affirm their dignity and strength.

Successive governments defended the immigration legislation as valid, claiming labor shortages and an excess of immigrants required control. But such claims were blatantly false. Large scale migration continued, but this involved whites from the Irish Republic and Europe. And Britain continued to be a country of net emigration [it lost a total of one half million people between 1971 and 1983]. Governments also claimed that race relations problems were being exacerbated by high levels of immigration. A classic case of blaming the victim.

In reality the expressed racial hostility of many whites was exploited by politicians. In 1964 the Conservative Party won a decisive victory in a parliamentary by-election by arguing that the Labour Party was soft on immigration control. The Conservative candidate willingly condoned the slogan, "If you want a nigger neighbor, Vote Labour!"

Before 1962, the Labour Party took a principled stand, arguing that immigration fulfilled the country's economic needs and claiming "we are categorically against immigration control."

After its electoral defeat in 1964 it did a u-turn. It declared "Effective control is indispensable, we have always accepted that."

While the immigration legislation has posed immense obstacles to those trying to enter the country, it has done irreparable damage to those settling there. It severely disrupted Black families, causing distress and anguish as spouses were separated from each other, parents from children.

And it communicated the message to White English people that racial harmony could only be achieved by keeping Black people out of the country. The less there were the better.

This meant that once immigration control had stopped the immigrants - and it did so effectively by the mid 1970s - the only option left was to get rid of the Blacks already there.

During the 1970s, several Members of Parliament introduced initiatives to repatriate Blacks - that is, to return them to their countries of origin. Voluntarily at first, forcibly if necessary. In Britain in the 1980s, the idea that a viable solution to "race relations" problems can be achieved by reparation is still publicly entertained and advocated by some Members of Parliament.

Britain had also introduced several anti-discrimination acts in the 1960s, largely influenced by legislation in the USA. But many of the problems that most adversely affect Black people are those arising from immigration legislation. Yet, immigration law was made exempt for the requirements of the anti-discrimination laws.

A clear message was broadcast: "Do as I say, don't do as I do." It has made government demands for racial harmony immoral in the eyes of the majority.

Immigration legislation in Britain represents the most disgraceful discrimination of its recent history. Motivated by economic interest and electoral expediency it constitutes the total abandonment of principle for the purpose of political gain.

The vast majority of non-Whites who were full and equal citizens in the 1950s have had their citizenship stripped from them And the present Black population is viewed as constituting a problem just by its very presence in the country.

Many of the lessons from this are obvious. But other more important ones are less evident. A few weeks ago, in a different context, internationally acclaimed sociologist, Professor Stuart Hall, conveyed one of these lessons very persuasively. he pointed out that when we seek to understand a message, we should look beyond its actual content to what is implied, or left unstated. These elements often have even greater impact.

Britain managed to close access to Blacks without ever mentioning the word "race." At a time when racial discrimination has become much less visible, but no less virulent, we ought not fail to learn from the American past . . . and from the British present.

Prof. discusses miseducation

By THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

Black students need to reevaluate the importance of the "million dollar white boy education" obtained in Eurocentric institutions, according to Dr. Leonard Jeffries, who spoke recently in the Campus Center.

Jeffries, chairman of the Black Studies department at the City College of New York, told about 100 students that they are being miseducated as to the true nature of African contributions to civilization. He said that history is exactly the sum of the two words that comprise it: "his" "story". "his" referring to the European man. Jeffries said that the European has deliberately tried to hide and minimize the overwhelming abundance of factual evidence which shows Africans and not Europeans as the "mothers"and "fathers" of civilization.

Professor Jeffries cited the concept of Greek fraternities and sororities as an example of one which has been attributed to Europeans but which in reality is African in origin.

". . . we have to rewrite history— we have to turn it upside down and we have to put that 'African factor' at the center.If I did not put the African factor at the heart I would not know that obelisk that was my grandfather's tombstone and symbolizes that lodge and comes directly out of the tradition of fraternity and sorority that Africans laid the foundation of-not Greeks.The tradition of brotherhood and sisterhood is the key pillar of African development of leadership - leadership which understands that they have a sacred responsibility to the spiritual development of their people; not having Greek fraternities who are responsible to themselves and their Greek brothers and sisters. African fraternal and sororotal orders meant that you had a responsibility to the development of your people-now and in the hereafter-and to the yet to be born. Not this little diddly s— that we are into now. So we have to begin to relate our history to history . . ."

Dr. Jeffries made reference to the monumental importance of African symbolism in Euro-American society.

"If most of us took our youngsters down to Washington D.C. we would say 'look at the Washington Monument they built for George the slaveowner. We don't have the knowledge and understanding to make reference to the African factor in that monument in Washington D.C. And because we have not sophisticatedly studied the history of our people with the intensity that we should have we can't make the analysis of what this monument means even if we know it's African. We would not be able to know that the form of the monument represents the male principle, the penis, but that the essence of the monument represents the power of the female to generate life;nurture, sustain it and regenerate life. This symbol of George Washington is your symbol,Black woman. It is the symbol of the African woman's power to regenerate life. But you don't know that-it's been kept from you-they don't want you to know your history.If you had any idea of the significance of your history you would be able to transform yourself, transform your families and your children,transform your communities, transform the world."

Dr. Jeffries urged Black students to gain the hunger for understanding which would propel them to search out the truth about their existence. The truth and brilliance, he admonishes, will be kept hidden and obscure unless Blacks make the attempts to find them.

Professor Jeffries' lecture was sponsored by members of the Distinquished Vistors program.

Black or African-American, what's the difference?

By JOSEPH L HILL JR.
Collegian Staff

Coloured, Negro and black are all names that have been used to describe people of African descent throughout the ages. Recently, Jesse Jackson upon returning from a trip to Africa, urged Black Americans to reject the terminology "Black" and make a conscious effort to refer to themselves as African-Americans.

The issue of exactly how Black Americans should refer to their ethnic group is not new. From slavery to the present, Blacks have struggled with this issue. Stokely Carmicheal [well-known black power advocate], in a recent interview aired on channel 13, urged Black Americans to disregard the labels Black and African-American and instead opt for the term African. Carmicheal, in support of his argument, asked "how can a person originate from a continent, Africa, and no longer be African?"

Also present during the interview was John Wynton, copy editor for the Wall Street Journal. Wynton, who echoed sentiments most commonly expressed by today's young professionals, maintained that Blacks should consider themselves strictly American; as the culture of mainstream American is essentially the same as that of of Black Americans.

> 'The issue of how Black Americans should refer to their ethnic group is not new. From slavery to the present, Blacks have struggled with this issue.'

He also said that Blacks should "stop worrying about the name on the container," and concentrate on obtaining those liberties that America is so fond of offering to the different peoples of the world.

At the heart of this conflict of changing labels is the significance of changing the labels. According to Edward Smith, "changing the terminology used to describe the ethnic group is a positive first step toward a reaffirmation of a seemingly lost cultural heritage."

Like the issue, the strategy is not new. many gr... that find themselves as a minority in this country, attempt to change their "label" in an effort to create a more positive atmosphere. Rick Townes, Associate Dean of Students, recalls rebelling against the term Negro, "Negro meant uncle tom," said Townes. Many people hold feelings similar to Townes, who is not satisfied with Black either. He rejects this usage because "it is a color and does not symbolize us."

In view of the amount of discussion that this issue is now being given, a new "movement" seems to be on the horizon. Afro-centrism is on the rise, Africa is now being used as a cultural base. In any movement, a redefinition of the names and issues plays a key role in shaping the direction of the movement.

Where this redefining of issues will take the Black community is unknown. Perhaps it is best that people follow this advice given by Wynton, who said " we [the Wall Street Journal] will wait to see how the Black community defines itself and then we'll use whatever term becomes common."

Students 'convinced' to use seatbelts

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst High School students realized the importance of seat belts last Friday when "the Convincer" came to town.

University of Massachusetts fraternity Alpha Chi Rho and the Amherst chapter of Students Against Drunk Drivers (SADD) brought the machine, which simulates a six to eight mile per hour crash, to the high school.

The demonstration was the second part of a drinking and driving forum sponsored by the fraternity. Early last week students were shown a film about the dangers of drinking and driviing.

Jan Saulsberry, coordinator of SADD, said the machine brings a more practical angle on the issue because it allows students to actually experience a car accident.

"The issue is one that needs to be presented on a consistent basis," he said. "If you bring it to the students' attention they do lots of thinking about it. Unfortunately, it is easy for them to forget. This machine hopefully will keep the idea in their heads a little longer."

Student reactions to "the Convincer" ranged from "sudden" to "pretty rough."

"I felt like my chest was going to cave in," said sophomore Morning Harris. "I usually wear my seat belt unless I am lazy, but I don't want to go through anything like that again. I'm convinced."

Officer John Grano of the Amherst Police Department said he is involved with all facets of public safety, but he believes this demonstration is one of the most effective.

One student asked Grano if he could ride "the Convincer" without a seat belt. Grano replied, "Just run full speed into a brick wall if you want to do that."

If the demonstration can save even one life, then it is worth the effort, Grano said.

"Wearing a seat belt is more of a habit than anything else," he said. "It's a lot better to have it on and not need it than need it and not have it. That's what we're trying to get across here."

Alpha Chi Rho president Jeff Russo commented that this community service program is beneficial because it provides information about the consequences of alcohol abuse.

"Alcohol abuse in relation to driving is an issue that we as a fraternity feel should be strongly dealt with," he said.

. Craig Griffin, head of Alpha Chi Rho's community service committee, also said this demonstratiion is worthwhile.

"By showing the students what can happen in a small crash," he said, "we can give the message that it can happen and the chances are increased if you drink and drive. We believe you shouldn't drink and drive ever and hopefully we got that point across to the students."

Comanor claims one of her major problems is the theft of many of her ideas by corporations.

Theft is not uncommon, she said, adding that she once sent some sketches to a corporation that soon used her ideas. She said the company refused to pay for her services, sending her a letter claiming the idea was in progress before she sent the samples.

"If I had the money from all my stolen ideas, I'd be another Donald Trump," Comanor said.

Comanor also criticized the use of cartoon animation via computer. She said cartoon drawers are professional artists, and added that at Fleischer Studios, cartoons were all drawn in great detail by hand, and not by machine.

"Computer cartoons are too mechanical," she said. "Creativity comes from the mind, something a machine can never duplicate."

Cartoon drawings are not only for entertainment, Comanor said, adding that she tries to convey a lesson through her work.

"Cartoons have . . . saved some lives by causing people to laugh," she said. "I see the same smiles on people's faces today that were there when we had the older cartoons. No matter how lighthearted, they play an important role."

Ads for women sell short

When I pick up a "fashion" magazine, I do so for my amusement. Maybe I'll see a new product or dress style that I might like to try. Maybe. Since these magazines are written for and by women, I don't understand the advertising philosophies they adhere to. I despise them. Why? I'll show you.

Meredith O'Brien

The Jovan Musk advertising campaign: In this perfume ad (trying to remember that it IS advertising perfume), there are six photographs on the page. The photos depict: a man and a woman lying on top of each other at the beach, a couple dancing (nothing wrong so far), a couple kissing, a peach with what looks like milk on the top of it, a woman leaning over in a thin camisole with a bare man's chest in the foreground, and the lower halves of a couple pressed together with their hands on one another's rear ends. Gee, that's just what I look for when purchasing perfume, a peach with milk on it!

The latest Reebok magazine ad: I'm a pseudo-runner (trying to jog when I can manage to get up before my 9:05 classes with time to shower) therefore, I'd be interested in running shoes. This four-page ad features physics equations, trying to persuade me that if I bought these new shoes my body would become physically fit. The strange thing is that the two center pages feature pictures of a woman in lingerie, with no sign of the sneakers anywhere. This woman is leaning and bending over with her hair in her face. (Funny, after I run, I really don't feel much like walking around in lingerie and bending over in strange ways.)

This ad did not tempt me to buy their sneakers, nor did it excite me. In fact, it struck me as peculiar that a woman in an ad for sneakers was posing the way a Playboy bunny poses.

Why did they do this? Did they hope I'd say, "I want a body like hers"? Maybe most women do wish to have better, firmer bodies, but not certainly not because of ads like this one.

The Reebok TV ad: It had a woman with just a g-string, Reebok sneakers and socks on, with a man wearing shorts, Reeboks and socks. The woman was shown in various sexual positions on the man, sitting on his shoulders (giving the illusion that she had nothing on) and was generally portrayed as the sex toy of the man.

What I am trying to say is that most women do not enjoy and are not enticed by the advertising we see in these "women's magazines." In fact, it is insulting and degrading to women in general. And to have these type of ads in a magazine geared toward women is an insult to our intelligence. I don't understand these women who work in the advertising agencies and own these magazines. They are exploiting themselves.

Women are not sex objects. We don't spend all day lounging around in sexy lingerie. We have faces. We actually have identities. We don't like to be portrayed as subservient to men. Who do these advertisers think they're selling to?

The Boston Globe ran an article about these sexually degrading ads in an article entitled, "A New Era of Eros in Advertising." A new era all right, not only are advertisers still exploiting women, they are taking advantage of the new sexual liberties that have been al'owed to be printed and run on television. They can explicitly show women at a man's foot wearing nothing but lingerie or even sneakers, socks and a g-string.

I'll try to pull myself out of bed tomorrow and go jogging — in my Reeboks. But, I don't think I'll wear a g-string or don any sexy lingerie afterwards. Call me unsophisticated, but I would much prefer a hot shower when I'm all sweaty.

Political movie madness

Don't hide just because your god is Lyndon LaRouche. At the University of Massachusetts there is a home for you, your opinions and beliefs. And if you can't find an organization to join that thinks the same as you, grab nine others who agree with you and start your own.

Alise Harfield

You have to appreciate that kind of opportunity in a school. Spending two years at an arch-conservative state university, I felt politically naive when I first transferred here. Hearing about the Radical Student Union, the University Democrats, the Republican Club, seeing rallies, pickets, vigils — the list goes on and on — has heightened my political awareness tremendously. It's great! I am happy to partake in debates about abortion or Bush, and attacks on budget cuts and Quayle. Such opportunities do not exist at every other college.

But there is a limit.

While I feel it necessary that each political group maintain their identity and continue to work toward whatever their causes, I cannot understand the constant efforts amongst themselves to hurt other groups in the process.

Last week I was all set to see my absolute favorite band, the only one I have ever seen live, in their movie, "Rattle and Hum." I'd seen this U2 film before, and loved the live footage. It was like experiencing the concert at Sullivan Stadium again.

But I never made it inside the Campus Center Auditorium. Call me a wimp. All day before the showing I was bombarded in the CC and Student Union by people who refused to identify their affiliation (I asked repeatedly) as they hung posters saying to boycott the movie because it was sponsored by the Republican Club (the posters, too, were unsigned); and because U2 is such a liberal, leftist band, this was hypocritical. I shouldn't give the Republican Club any money in their hypocritical cause.

A few questions: was every kid, student, teen, man, woman and pothead at Sullivan Stadium that night wildly liberal? How about the people, the hundreds of thousands who go to see U2 and listen to them and buy their albums? Do they express their political views by the rock bands they like? Or the movies they go to? By wanting to attend 'Rattle and Hum' last week, was I making a statement about my political opinions? Was I supporting the Republicans on campus?

I have news for that unidentified group: the answers are all no. And while I can't speak for anyone but myself and my circle of friends (however small), the answer is still a resounding NO.

And no, I am not a member or remote supporter of the Republican Club.

I just wanted to see a movie for aesthetic enjoyment. Is this so bad? Isn't this what Hollywood is for — to make movies and T.V. for people's pleasure? Should people boycott every Lou Grant rerun because they don't agree with Ed Asner's policies on Central America? And should people throw out every album, cassette, poster, button and T-shirt affiliated with anyone who ever worked in or helped produce Live-Aid, Band-Aid, Farm-Aid or U.S.A. for Africa just because conservatives think all those artists are a bunch of nutty liberals? Should people stop drinking Pepsi, as the conservatives want, because it helps the Soviet Union? Or, should people stop drinking Coke, as liberals want, because it helps South Africa?

Since when is entertainment so darn political?

Maybe these poster-hangers and others whose only "political" goal is to thwart efforts of other groups should concentrate on their own ends, and leave the moviegoers alone. Don't they realize all they're doing is giving the groups they hate more publicity?

Gorbachev betrays movement

In response to Pedro Pereira's column ("Our international love affair," April 12): Yes, there seems to be a love affair going on between the East and the West, the USA and the USSR. One thing is clear, the two are no longer enemies. But the change is not due entirely to the changes Gorbachev has brought about. The ruling classes of the entire industrialized north have come to far-reaching conclusions; socialism and capitalism are not doomed to eternal strife. Within 10 years, the US will have a much smaller military industrial complex. It will have socialized medicine instead. The USSR will face unemployment, a rising middle class, a free market, and a rise in the standards of living.

So why aren't I happy? Because the prospects for revolution around the world are diminished. Sorry Gorby, but I was happy you were in Afghanistan helping the Afghans' revolution. I wanted you to supply weapons to the ANC, the FMLN, Nicaragua and other countries and national liberation movements. I wanted the communist movement around the world to prepare for the demise of capitalism. When I see you smile with Reagan and Thatcher, I want to puke.

I will still defend the USSR. It is undoubtedly better there than in the US. But let it be known that I have my doubts. I will always be for socialism — with you, or without you, Gorby. And I will always be against the imperialistic United States (not its people), and the social divisions for which it stands. No "love affair" between the two countries will blind me to harsh reality.

The answers of science produce ethical questions

I was in Dallas last week at a convention of the American Chemical Society. I realize the activities of 7,000 nerds may be of limited interest to this audience, but I think some of the things reported there would catch almost anyone's attention.

A biochemist announced the discovery of a human protein that seems to attack certain types of cancer cells and the sorts of viruses that cause malaria and AIDS. He synthesized and concentrated the protein, and demonstrated its potency in mice. He says it may kill both infected human cells and viral agents.

Then there was nuclear fusion. On Sunday, chemists speculated on a showdown between the nuclear physicists (who had not obtained fusion even with millions of degrees of heat) and the man who claimed to obtain fusion at room temperature by running a weak current through a less than exotic solution with a palladium electrode. By Wednesday, new reports from Texas, Georgia and Moscow indicated duplication of his results, and the entire convention packed itself into an arena for a tutorial on nuclear physics and electrochemistry. Mostly they just wanted to see the man who may win a Nobel prize for room-temperature fusion.

And there was the biotechnology section. Dozens of groups demonstrated plastics that could be safely eaten by bacteria, slugs, and/or crickets. Other groups showed research on bacteria: some could take acid-rain-causing sulfur out of coal; some could harvest minerals, such as gold, from rock; some could destroy pollutants. They revealed rain-proof insecticides and genetically engineered plants and microbes. Some people talked about ways to grow human organs in test tubes for potential transplants.

Rusty Denton

There were the expected presentations about superconducting ceramics and semi-conducting plastics and plastics that don't burn, but there were also three papers that reported making magnets from plastic materials containing no metals. Hearing about that was my particular interest in going to Dallas.

Some of the science reported in Dallas was dramatic, obviously, but it was more than speculation. In ten years, maybe less, quite a bit of it will show up in commercial applications. We're in a time of intense changes in technology. The pace of research is accelerating at an unprecedented rate, and new scientific journals are being started up every month. The amount of technical information available is staggering.

Part of this is due to the computer revolution; it's so much easier to search the literature these days. It's also due to international affluence; even developing nations have major research programs. Unfortunately, while technlogy is accelerating, American companies are cutting back on anything that doesn't bring immediate profits — a comment I've heard everywhere — and fewer and fewer Americans are learning even the fundamentals of science, much less pursuing higher education in it.

That spells disaster; it means our society is going to be less competent to govern our burgeoning technical progress. Science is like a government revenue officer; it only tells leadership what amount of treasures it is possible to collect; it cannot tell how to spend them or even if it is always wise to collect them. The decisions don't get any easier: fossil fuels, nuclear fission power, genetic engineering, surrogate mothering, sex-change operations; those things are just the beginning of issues we'll have to sort out.

As a scientist, I was excited by what I saw in Dallas. As a citizen, I have to wonder what potential disasters are buried in the technology. And I have to wonder if we'll be ready for them.

Gilchrist convicted of first-degree murder

Former Merrill Lynch employee receives life sentence for shooting boss

BOSTON (AP) — Lonnie Gilchrist was convicted of first-degree murder yesterday for shooting his boss at the brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch the day after he was fired from the firm, Gilchrist was immediately sentenced to life in prison.

The jury rejected defense attorney Norman Zalkind's argument that Gilchrist's troubled childhood with an abusive an alcohol father left him feeling persecuted later in life and blaming prejudice for his failures.

Zalkind had urged the jury to find Gilchrist not guilty by reason of insanity, claiming that Gilchrist was in the grips of a paranoid psychosis when he shot and killed George Cook, regional vice president of the brokerage firm.

On April 7, 1988, the day after he was fired, Gilchrist entered Cook's office and shot him three times with a .22-caliber pistol as the executive sat behind his desk.

As Cook crawled toward his door crying for help, witnesses said Gilchrist shot him twice more, beat and kicked him, and yelled "No billionaire is going to do this to me!"

Before the morning shooting, Gilchrist completed a $125,000 bond transaction, took a walk, canceled an appointment with his dentist and told co-workers he was going to teach Cook a lesson.

Suffolk County Assistant District Attorney Ronald Moynahan said that Gilchrist's business-as-usual manner prior to the shooting showed he was in control of his actions at the time.

Gilchrist had gone to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to file a complaint against Merrill Lynch. But Zalkind said during the trial that Cook actually spent time trying to help Gilchrist succeed.

Steven R. Lively, another Merill Lynch employee and a former Boston College football star tackled Gilchrist in Cook's office and held him until authorities arrived. Lively, who is black, quit the firm three months later and filed a complaint with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination

Interim US attorney takes oath of office

BOSTON (AP) — Wayne Budd took the oath of office yesterday to become the new interim US attorney in Massachusetts as friends and colleagues touted his string character and sense of fairness.

US District Court Judge David Nelson administered the oath to Budd, a long-time friend and colleague whom Nelson praised for his integrity and leadership.

"Wayne and I go back a long way, so it's a very, very great honor that I have this opportunity to participate," Nelson said.

Budd was nominated in February to replace former US Attorney Frank L. McNamara, who left office amid allegations that he lied during an internal Justice Department probe and used his office for political gains.

Budd, whose nomination to the full post is pending Senate approval, has said he hopes to bring stability back to the US attorney's office that McNamara left in turmoil.

Yesterday, he promised the nearly 50 assistant US attorneys who will work for him that he will bring "all the energy I can muster" to the office.

Crew believed to have survived sinking of cargo vessel

BOSTON (AP) — A 652-foot cargo vessel carrying a load of cement apparently sank about 400 miles southeast off Cape Cod yesterday, but all 25 crew members aboard were either rescued of sighted in a life boat, said a Coast Guard spokesman.

Another merchant ship called to the scene by the Coast Guard sighted the life rafts from the foundering SDtar of Alexandira several hours after the first Mayday call was heard in New Yore at about 9:05 a.m., according the Coast Guard officials.

One raft, contaioning 23 crew members of the freighter, was picked up by the 713-foot cargio vessel Ravenscraig, said Petty Officer Randy Midgett of the Coast Guard in New York.

The second raft, believed top contain the remaining two crew members, was spotted but not yet picked up as of yesterday afternoon, Midgett said.

The Star of Alexandria was bound for New York City from Athens with a load of cement, Midgett said. Members of the crew reported the vessel began takingo on water in 12-foot seas and winds of between 30 mph and 35 mph.

The cuase of the sinking was not immediately known, Midgett said.

Visibility ion the rough seas was 5 miles to 8 miles yesterday afternoon with winds ranging from 30 mph to 35 mph at the scene of the apparent sinking, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Jeff Crawley.

A C-130 plane from Elizabeth City, N.C., was able to drop a radio into the water neat the raft carrying most of the crew members and they were able to establish communications, Midgett said.

Sagacious Junkie's salute to the sublime 70's

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Hi there kids! It's me again. Drukman's gone AWOL this week, probably something to do with last week's character assassination. Okay, I admit I went a wee bit OTT on him, but it was a question of national pride. Anyway he's left me with a bit of a problem - all these column inches and nothing except Polyfilla and peanut butter to fill 'em. So today I've decided to try something a wee bit different by way of contrast to the usual "this is fabbo - so buy it matey!" school of Disc Junkie columns. It has come to my attention that there is a growing movement of cynical pseudo-intellectuals and "cultural critics" who have joined together in the hopes of crushing the revival of "the golden age of classical antiquity" otherwise known as the 70's. Let's face it friends. These people are obviously just "not knowing." Its time to set the record straight.

DISC

True, the 70's, like any other decade, produced a hell of a lot of bilge - a.k.a James Taylor, The Doobies, Cat Stevens, The Eagles, Journey - just think of anything involving White, middle-class hippy jet trash that justifies the moniker "Classic Rock" - ad infinitum. Strangely, none of this is ever mentioned by the anti-70's-ists, I suspect because you'd probably find many of the above proudly nestling among their tape collections.

But what about the Stooges, who influenced every great 80's sonic trash-rock band worth the name - weren't they 70's?. Or T-Rex, Bolan's blueprint for perfect pop, rising, propelled by its exquisite nothingness light years away from the blow wave of no wave pretty boy fart students who tried to ape its style, sass and sex, only to sink into the ignominity of pre-pubescent wet screams. And just what about the "rare groove" phenomenon, perfect marriages of real jazz and real funk, as perpetrated by the likes of Maceo and the Macs, Fred Wesley and the JBs, the Fatback Band and Byron Morris - what about James Brown himself? Or how about the wondrous "ch'k-uh-wank" of the wah-wah pedal, perfected to a fine art on Isaac Hayes' Shaft and Curtis Mayfield's Superfly.

I wonder if these anti-70's-ists ever actually dance, and if so, what it is they dance to. House music, perhaps? You know, that "oh so eighties" super hi-tech sonic boom bass stuff with all the nifty sampling, which to the best of my knowledge possibly predates disco, beginning way back in 1975 when a couple of DJs at Chicago's now defunct Warehouse club started mucking about with Kraftwerk's Trans-Europe Express album.

And what about disco itself, which seems to bear the brunt of the criticism from the anti-70's mob, probably because to them disco means nothing more than Woolies bargain basement Bee Gees tapes, Kelly Marie and Hooked on Classics. I wonder if they've ever experienced the cosmic moog rapture of a Buddy Miles record, or the power of Don Myrick's Phoenix Horns (who sound so much better punctuating the "Boogie Wonderland" of Earth Wind and Fire, than they do suffering the pseudo-Motown ineptitude of crafty cockney Phil "Bob 'Oskins" Collins.

I wonder if they know that trendy club faves Cameo started life in flares and afros on the disco express, or that just about every hip-hop track released these days samples heavily from the FunkaParliamentadelic mob, surely the most outrageously inventive musical outfit ever to funk the face of the planet. Which in itself is another story. Do these people seriously think that Prince would be where he is today if it wasn't for the eccentric genius of George Clinton (who, for example, challenged Freud's conception of anal retention on "Promentalshitbackwashpsychosis Enema Squad (the Doo Doo Chasers)" back in '78!? Or Sly Stone?

Together with the fashions; the flares, wide-collar shirts, waistcoats etc, which seem to be returning to the wardrobes of style hounds everywhere, this music celebrates a culture that was a culture, that revelled in its outlandishness, its sexuality, a culture that provided the perfect antithesis for America's post-vietnam weltschmertz. Sure, like today, the kids had nowhere to go. But at least they were all dressed up. I'm glad there's a 70's revival going on. It's about time the young uns woke up from their state of MTV anaesthesia, and started wearing some real clothes and listening to some real music.

Pinski: poetry of supreme importance

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Correspondent

Tonight at 8 p.m., poet Robert Pinski will speak at the University of Massachusetts' Memorial Hall. The event is free to the public and is co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and the UMass Poetry Society.

So what? So it's poetry. No flashing lights, artificial noises, stunning visuals or funny haircuts. Just the English language used to express one person's feelings as honestly and as simply as possible. By its very nature there can be no pretense in poetry, but for the contradictions of the heart. "Poetry simply is," said Malarme. It is the purest form of artistic expression known to man and there's no cover charge.

Robert Lowell wrote that "Robert Pinski belongs to that rarest of talent - a poet-critic." This dual capability is exhibited in Pinski's most recent book, a collection of essays titled Poetry and The World, published by Ecco Press. He writes with a subtle passion that makes the pages deserve such grandiose a title. He explores the written word in relation to our 'worldly world' and vice-versa.

Read these words: "It is good to read a poem that suggests that poems are supremely important," Pinski writes about Czeslaw Milosz's poem "Incantation."

"Human reason is beautiful and invincible . . . and poetry, her ally in the service of the good."

Pinski writes "I would like to write poetry which would contain every kind of thing while keeping all the excitement of poetry." He succeeds. Experience it for yourself; the purifying effect of poetry, at absolutely no cost, but for the irrelevance of time.

Bone Cow Nation opens reader's forum

By JASON TALERMAN
Collegian Staff

My roomates watch me sleep. I get home at midnight; fall asleep to Bobbi Battista and Headline News. They say that I shake uncontrollably, breaking ground in the still unresolved area of rapid eye movement research. The tendons contract behind my knees and I wake with silent screams. Pretty dramatic stuff. It's not like I want to sleep though. I don't trust dreams and, besides, I'm young and strong and should do as much as possible now, before my body starts the ever-tricky decomposition process.

I'm well aware that the Bones column started out in the realm of commentary on progressive music. I've lost my patience with that lot though. I'm sure it'll come back to me but all I can manage these days is Exile on Main Street accompanied with anything over 75 proof (equivalent chemical substitutes are evaluated informally, with an emphasis placed on the ex post facto statute.). At any rate, it might be safer to say that my column has simply broadened its scope. Indeed I have even bastardized local politics in recent issues, something I will not do again, unless provoked. I might have spread myself too thin though. Anybody that knows me knows that I'm just about at the breaking point. My skin crawls, my arms and hands are blue and veiny, I feel like my only recourse is going to be through real grade A violence, physical or otherwise.

So, alas I've come up with an interim solution. From this point on, the Bones column will take on a question and answer format. This will put the pressure on you and leave the vengeance up to me. Any questions are fair game, science, love, pyrotechnics, anything. Address questions to J. Talerman, c/o Collegian, 113 Campus Center. Dead serious. Try me.

The The hippest from Youth and hop from De La Soul

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Correspondent

The The -The Beaten Generation (single)- C.B.S. Records
Ciccone Youth- The Whitey Album - Enigma Records
De La Soul- Three Feet High and Rising - Big Life Records

Outside of the general staple of underground music for Yuppies(i.e. college radio) are a few boys and girls who make noise with words worth listening to for reasons beyond social acceptance.

RECORD REVIEW

The first single I ever bought is the new The The song. Starting out with the brilliant depiction of adolescent angst on "Soul Mining," maturing to a youthful and healthy unconditional disgust on "Infected," The The's new album Mindbomb is a welcome headbutt after the two aforementioned body punches. However, at this point all that's available to most is this great song, ridiculously overpriced at $4.29.

The lyrics are Matt Johnson's usual (almost taken for granted) powerful slap of reality: "freedom lives in the barrels of a warm gun." To quote anymore would be out of context and make things seem a tad silly. They're great, trust me. What's odd but wonderful is the way the music is so catchy, so damn poppy - a definite radio song. Johnny Marr is now a part of the band so all of Morrissey's drippy worshippers can develop a new interest. And Mr. Marr plays a fine harmonica on top of his always good guitar work.

"And our youth . . . are being seduced, by the greedy hands of politics and half truths."

I bought this single at Main Street Records and was told that "All of British music is self-absorbed and neurotic," by an obviously way hip sales clerk. He was referring especially to The The, whose pronunciation he was kind enough to correct me on. "American music's where it's at, pal." Ignorant me.

Well . . . Ciccone Youth are Yankee folk and their The Whitey Album is where it's at. The album itself is a melody of sheer noise that puts 80's pop through a meat grinder before blowing it up and pissing on the remains. One great achievement of this album is on the track "Two Cool Rock Chicks Listening to N.E.U.," wherein J. Masics actually plays something of value, Mr. Masics being one of the major proponents of Yuppie underground rock in the sadly popular American group Dinosaur Jr.

But even more than this, Ciccone Youth also manage to regurgitate "Addicted To Love" by Robert Palmer and two of Madonna's smellier farts: "Into The Groove" and "Burning Up" into music. Amazing, that.

Then there's the very best rap song in the universe, "The Tough Titty Rap" and the joyful "Hi Everybody," a pleasant contrast to Guns-N-Roses' first mega-shit. And then, "The Needle Gun" which is silence, and damn fine silence at that.

It all makes sense. They say it in "Making The Nature Scene": "Fragmentation is the whole, unity is not taught in school . . . the order of decay."

And it bears repeating, they've made the shit (the now) Miss Ciccone (over) producing something strangely beautiful. Someday this band's interpretation will be all we remember of Madonna. One can hope, I hope.

Back at Main Street Records, being told The The suck, I was also told that De La Soul are "the newest hip thing." Well, The The are better than De La Soul but De La Soul are grrreat. In fact, they're too good and too original to be hip.

De La Soul have jumped into the overtrodden dead-end street of rap and have taken the form up, up and away. Or at least "Three Feet High and Rising," far enough to get out of the choking dust of gold chains and bullshit machismo so associated with hip hop.

It's over an hour long with twenty three tracks that make insane sense out of nothing and everything. It's very fresh and wonderful, "three is the magic number."

And if I say anymore I'll be suspected of unconditional love. Suffice to say . . . there are people doing something of worth somewhere.

Children's lit conference has American flavor

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Correspondent

At 9 a.m. Saturday, April 8, nearly 500 people filled Mahar Auditorium to begin the 18th annual Perspective in Children's Literature conference. The choice of award winning poet and author Lucille clifton as the keynote speaker made it clear to anyone familiar with this artist's work that the predominant theme was the often unconscious but nonetheless active presence of racism within children's literature.

Lucille Clifton spoke with the strength, truth and clarity that the subject deserves: "I have an American point of view," she said, making the point that this country is made up of many different cultures, all of which deserve respect.

"For some reason we think ignorance protects us," she said. It was stressed that a person's language is a very personal part of one's identity and that history has misrepresented how diverse a culture we live in. "Native American youngsters don't know why they were only at the first Thanksgiving," Clifton pointed out.

"This is a planet of color, not just a white planet," she said, "It's important that the children's literature of America reflect the children of America."

Clifton said she was not reflected in children's literature in her own childhood, and worse still, she didn't even know it. But she wants that to change . . . in the face of what she sees today: "I think we have a generation that is almost lost . . . I am frightened because we seem unable to save them now. It is a disservice to White children that there is little but their own reflections in children's literature."

Clifton gathered momentum with words that called for action: "There is hunger for people for what is not in their hands . . . William Stafford said that to know what has occurred and to do nothing about it is one of our greater crimes . . . but one person can make a difference . . . one teacher, one librarian . . . we roam in groups but we teach one by one. I believe that civilization will be judged not for what we do, but for who we are."

In response to her impassioned plea for humanity on the part of we human beings, Clifton received a more than deserved standing ovation.

These words lingered as the conference wheeled on with about a dozen workshops ranging from the techniques of illustration (from author/illustrator Eric Carle) to the helping of children to deal with emotional loss.

The conference was a worthy literary event, directed by UMass Professor of Education Marsha K. Rudman. The majority of the attendees were professionals in elementary education, children's book publication and library science. Most were parents and, it has to be mentioned, white, which made their response, and the general mood of the conference all the more encouraging.

The second speaker was Brother Blue. A man full of wonder and color, he is a "story teller," and as such he kept the Mahar Audience spellbound for more than an hour.

"Story telling is God playing peekaboo through your rainbow eyes - your rainbow skin," he said. No matter how racist or homophobic one may be, this man has a way of touching you. He says what he wants to be doing is "Trying to tell it like it 'be' in the MIDDLE - in the middle of the middle of me! Soul singing to SOUL - to the middle of the SOUL!"

Brother Blue is wonderful in that he is full of the wonder of life and he is gifted with talent, and just as important, the desire, to share that wonder, at the most base level of communication - person to person. He is a colored man who has color in his soul (as we all do). He wants to rejoice for that color we all share, and he does so beautifully.

UMass track teams show improvement over weekend

• Minutemen take fourth in New Hampshire

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

In track, as in all sports, one shouldn't judge a team by its place in the final standings. Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's track team finished a mediocre fourth in a five-team meet in Durham, NH. Host University of New Hampshire was winner on the day with 87 points. The University of Rhode Island was second with 71 points, and the University of Vermont was third with 61. Then came UMass with 40 points, and the University of Maine was last with 35.

Despite the results, coach Ken O'Brien was very impressed by his team's performance. "A gigantic improvement," said O'Brien. "A 180-degree turnaround. I was really excited about our performances." The previous Saturday at Dartmouth the team finished fourth in a field of five, as they did this past Saturday, so how could there have been any improvement?

"Every event we placed in." said O'Brien. In most events UMass was able to get at least two people into the finals, and consequently score more points than at Dartmouth, where UMass finished with just 26 total points. So Saturday's production of 40 total points was a 14-point improvement. Although they didn't get many firsts, seconds, and thirds, UMass often came away with a fourth, fifth, or a sixth place.

In the 5000, for UMass Fitz Hagan finished third and William Wallace was fourth. In the 800 and 1500 Reinardo Flores and Steve Tolly teamed up to score points for UMass. In the 1500, Flores finished third and Tolly was fifth. In the 800, Tolly grabbed fourth while Flores finished sixth. "We

What's that saying, "April showers bring May flowers."

Well, it seems that the April showers Saturday at the Smith Invitational brought out the fruits of the flowers a little early as the University of Massachusetts women's outdoor track team had an exceptional day, proving that last week's letdown at Dartmouth may have been just a fluke.

Coach Julie LaFreniere said, "We had better weather last week, but I don't think that there's any comparison. We had 10 New England qualifying performances, three personal bests, one school record, and an ECAC qualifier.

"It's only our second meet, but the kids responded and looked 100 percent better. There was a big improvement."

Junior Tina White had the biggest day, as she pulled off a personal best and a new UMass record. Though she qualified for the New England in the hammer throw last week with a throw of 121 feet, throwing coach Jim Giroux was nevertheless disappointed. White came back Saturday and threw 129-8, breaking the old school standard by 10 feet, while vaulting herself into the ECAC meet. What was doubly amazing about White's record was that it was under very poor weather conditions. "For the throwers, especially the hammer, weather is crucial," said LaFreniere. "When they throw the hammer, in their spin, they have to have the four kilos rotating with your body and at the same time keep their balance.

didn't get into the front of the pack. We got outgunned in terms of quality performances."

Freshman Steve Brown probably had the best day for UMass. Brown won the 400 in 48.8 seconds, and then anchored the mile relay team of himself, Garfield Vaughn, Mike Grey, and Felix DeLaRosa to a first-place finish. Brown ran his leg in 48.4 seconds.

Other notable performances for UMass included sophomore Jon Corso's third place in the 10000, and the third place of the 4x100 relay team of DeLaRosa, Vaughn, Grey, and Brown.

Hopefully for the Minutemen, they will continue to improve as the they prepare for Saturday's meet in Dedham, MA against Brown, Northeastern, and Southern Connecticut.

throwers have to throw from] is wet like that, it makes it that much harder. The shot has to go across the circle and the disc rain can sometimes be disastrous."

Another thrower, Simone Marisseau, broke the 40-foot barrier in the shot put for the first time with a throw of 40-4, upping her New England throw by almost three feet. "This really surprised Jim, who didn't think she would hit 40 [Saturday]," said LaFreniere. Helen Balaouras took third in the discus and the shot. The senior has qualified for the New Englands in the disc and is approaching the ECAC standard in the shot, where she improved by two feet from last week with a throw of 35-4.

Northhampton's Diane Ozzolek, who had sort of a homecoming competing at Smith, just missed qualifying for the New Englands in both her events. She finished fifth in the discus and sixth in the hammer with tosses of 113-9 and 116-9, respectively, missing the NE standard in the disc by three inches and in the hammer by fifteen inches. "She's right there and she has two more meets to do it," said LaFreniere. "She's a lot stronger [from the indoor season], she's doing well, and she's only a freshman."

Though the rain was not a factor in some events, it probably was in the javelin. Carla DeSantis finished second despite an excellent throw of 130 feet and Nancy Laurie was fourth with a 113-2.

Lee Ann Ambrose won the quarter mile in 57.8 seconds and was the runner-up in the 200 with a time of 25.8. In the 200, LaFreniere said "she didn't have a good start, but her strength is in the longer distance anyway. That's where after running the 400 and the weather comes in. You've got to have nice weather; when it's cold, the muscles are cold and it takes longer for them to react."

Shana Smith and Sue McFadyen were among the New England qualifiers which emerged from the Smith meet. Both had cut their times, Smith running a 4:48 1500 (a big 10-second cut from last week) and McFadyen took two seconds off her 400 hurdle time, down to 69.7 seconds.

The other new qualifiers, Sonja Vaughan and Amy St. Pierre, are just starting to get back from injuries sustained during the indoor season. Vaughan, one of New England's best half-milers last year, ran a 2:21 for second place. "She was out all indoors, pulling a hamstring," said LaFreniere. "She doesn't have the strength to carry through the 800 yet. I was happy was that she was competitive and that she hung in there."

St. Pierre, a freshman, captured second in the 5000 with a 18:39.09. Her teammate in the 5000, Kathy Holt, just missed the NE mark of 18:40 with a personal-best 18:42.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

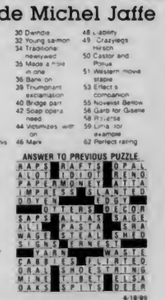
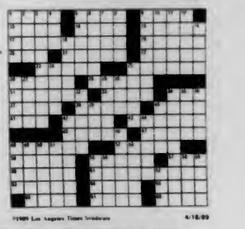
ANSWER TO PREVIOUS PUZZLE





TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Conditions are right for changing jobs or making a move to help others. Advice from people at a distance proves very useful. Opposition to your plans evaporates. Reach out to new allies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) domestic problems can be solved by talking things over with mate. More money will be coming in than going out this week. Put some in savings. Eating nutritiously boosts your energy level.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A lucky day lies ahead. A relationship moves closer or your ideal. Recognize that a business venture may not pay off for a long time. Travel proves gratifying. You make important contacts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A family member may be ready to make a move. Help all you can. You always work hard but can now play hard, too. You find a better way to use an imaginative idea.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Draw fully on your energy reserves so that you can make hay while the sun shines. Your enthusiasm is contagious! Count on greater cooperation from work associates.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Go that extra step and you will attain what you really want. Get updates and the latest reports before finalizing your plans. Avoid any involvement in a power struggle in the workplace.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) If you have to make a purchase today, but sure it is the best money can buy. A romantic interlude is a source of inspiration. Give partner more emotional support. Listen attentively.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Look forward to a fast-paced schedule this week. Although travel appeals to you and your partner, you will gain more by staying home. Romance heats up. Know your own heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Love is a grand adventure! Take advantage of certain changes being made now to feather your own nest. Save criticism for another time. The emphasis this week is on satisfying the boss.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Progress will come easier today. Yesterday's worries recede. Business options will be plentiful. Be sure your finances are in good order. Travel is best postponed. Contact an influential friend who may feel neglected.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Make the most of the special benefits available to you. Stretch your imagination and look for new outlets for your talents. Higher-ups are looking for a real go-getter like that person.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) The pace will pick up as the day progresses. Friends will ask for favors. Do not ask for something in return. You will reap a bigger reward if you wait awhile.

Multiple choice.

Now there's more in the Apple® Macintosh® family to choose from than ever before, with six computers to meet every personal computing need.

Start with the Macintosh Plus, the Macintosh SE, and the Macintosh SE/30. These integrated systems offer the affordability, ease of use, and consistency of applications traditionally associated with Macintosh.

And their compact design makes them easy to transport, wherever you go.

Now meet the modular side of the family: the Macintosh II, Macintosh IIx, and the newest member, the very versatile Macintosh IIcx. These expandable, high-performance computers can be configured for virtually any task. You choose the amount of RAM, the type of monitor, and the storage capacity of the hard disk, which means you can build a system to handle everything from desktop publishing to scientific and engineering applications.

But no matter which system you choose, you're still getting all the advantages of a Macintosh.

this was all in the last two games.

"They beat us to every ground ball," Bossio said. "They won every draw except for one."

The newly employed zone which was so effective in stopping the running game of Harvard was picked apart by UNH, and in particular Courtney McKown, who burned the Gazelles for five goals.

"We weren't moving our feet," Bossio said. "So we were coming over the shoulder and over the head."

The flat-footed Gazelles committed foul after foul all afternoon and the Wildcats took full advantage as they scored on five of 11 free position shots.

The Gazelles were shut out 5-0 in the first half. Bossio did not fault the attack. The defense just could not get the ball away from the Wildcats. Bossio could see it coming, though.

"The minute I walked into the pregame huddle, I knew we were in trouble because of the blank faces they (the Gazelles) had on," Bossio said.

UMass cannot afford to come into today's game with blank faces. Dartmouth is in the exact opposite situation of the Gazelles. The Big Green has won its last seven games since losing its opener to Northwestern University.

Dartmouth is ranked No. 7 in the country by the Brine Coaches Poll and is the third top-10 team that the Gazelles have run into in their last three games. Dartmouth is also ranked No. 2 in New England behind Harvard.

"Whatever it was they (the Gazelles) had for the Harvard game, that's what we have to do," Bossio said.

One thing they will have to do is deny senior forward Anne Moellering the ball. Moellering has been unstoppable this season, netting 41 goals and three assists.

"We need to play a gritty game," Bossio said. "We need to get down and dirty."

At 1-7 with five games left, the Gazelles cannot even reach the .500 mark. There is no hope of any post-s?ents. All that is left is to erase the hopes of other teams. UMass has nothing to lose. The Gazelles can afford to take a lot of chances Bossio said.

"We're in the spoiler's seat," Bossio said. "Dartmouth right now is in a good spot to make the NCAAs. A loss to us will knock them out."

Late surge propels Gorillas past Yale

By JEFF PRICE
Collegian Correspondent

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — On a day more fitting for ducks than lacrosse, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team utilized a seven-goal fourth-quarter outburst to tame ninth-ranked Yale 13-8, Saturday afternoon at the Yale Soccer and Lacrosse Stadium.

Going into the final stanza the Gorillas, currently 7-1 and ranked eighth in the country, trailed 7-6 and looked in need of an urgent wake-up call to get on track. That call was answered just 35 seconds into the quarter, however, when midfielder Tim Soudan found attackman Rob Codignotto alone in front of the net to even the score at seven.

From that point, UMass put on an offensive display that left the Elis wondering what had happened to their once-comfortable 7-5 advantage.

"I was glad to see we kept our composure when we fell behind," said head coach Dick Garber. "We had been standing around all day, but finally in the fourth quarter we began to swarm around the loose balls. That type of play is very contagious."

It certainly seemed contagious over the next 14 minutes as the UMass attack peppered Yale netminder Anthony Guido with an unending barrage of shots. At the 5:55 mark, sophomore Jim McAleavey netted his second of three goals on the afternoon. McAleavey circled from behind the left side of the net and deposited Paul Ganci's pass into the Yale goal putting the Gorillas ahead for good, 8-7.

Junior Scott Hiller then added his fourth goal of the day just 50 seconds later on an isolation dodge move from the left side. The onslaught continued with McAleavey, Soudan, Ganci, and Codignotto each adding goals in the fourth quarter to account for the final score.

"Yale is a very good team," Garber noted. "But over the course of the game we had used more players and they (Yale) were simply fatigued. I knew things would change in the fourth quarter."

In the early going it seemed as if the poor conditions (steady rain and a slippery field) and a sluggish start by UMass was going to reduce this match-up between two of New England's top teams to a rout. Yale jumped out to a quick 3-0 lead on tallies by Mike Reilly, Peter Pace and Herb Allen.

The Gorillas battled back in the second frame with two goals by Hiller, an individual move off the face-off by Josh Schimmel and a spinning goal in front of the net by McAleavey. The goal by McAleavey put UMass ahead for the first time in the contest, 5-4, with just 49 seconds remaining in the half.

The half did not end without controversy, however, as Yale's Mike Babcock tied the score from the top of the box with no time left on the clock. "The officials had told us before the game the clock did not work properly in the last 30 seconds," Garber said. "Thus there was really nothing we could say."

With that shift in momentum, Yale then came out of the blocks strong in the third quarter on goals by Reilly and Allento take a 7-5 advantage. With just 21 seconds remaining in the quarter, freshman attack Michael Cain set the stage for UMass' fourth-quarter offensive outburst with a diving scoring bid in front of the net that cut the deficit to one.

Gazelles fall to UNH, 11-2

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Yesterday may have been a holiday, but University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Patti Bossio was not giving her troops the day off from practice.

Not after Saturday's 11-2 rout of the Gazelles by the University of New Hampshire and not with Dartmouth coming to town today (3 p.m., Totman Field).

"We played probably one of the worst games we played all season," Bossio said of her team's loss on Saturday. "We had no spark and New Hampshire was so fired up."

UMass will have to get fired up today if it wishes to match points with Dartmouth. The Big Green is one of the top 10 teams in the country as was UNH.

The Gazelles have lost seven games in a row and have won only one all season. They've gone from a peak, when they gave Harvard (the No. 2 team in the nation) all that the Crimson could handle, to a new low when they played horribly against the Wildcats in Durham, NH on Saturday. And

Minutemen split four Atlantic 10 games with Rhode Island

Junior Paul Ciaglo threw a no-hitter Saturday only to see the Minutemen lose, 1-0, on a pair of errors.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Now matter how hard it tries, the University of Massachusetts baseball team can't crack the .500 mark.

This weekend the Minutemen had a perfect chance to not only do that but to improve their chances of making the Atlantic 10 conference tournament next month. But UMass could muster only a split of the four games it played against the University of Rhode Island, enough to keep its records even across the board.

The Minutemen, 13-13 overall and 4-4 in the A-10, will host Vermont in a doubleheader today a 1 p.m. at Lorden Field.

The disenchanting factor is that UMass could have, and probably should have swept the ready-to-be-taken Rams. The Minutemen blew a late two-run lead in yesterday's final game, and also lost the weekend opener despite Paul Ciaglo's no-hitter.

"We need to be more consistent," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "A lot of it is team chemistry."

Yesterday, although a day late after rain washed out Sunday's action, things started out right as Dave Telgheder hurled a four-hitter and the Minutemen exploded for five in the seventh to take a 6-1 win. Brian Donovan, despite a broken wrist, drove in the winner with a pinch-hit sacrifice fly, and Drew Comeau followed with a three-run blast to left, his first of two on the day.

Don Strange carried a 5-3 lead into the sixth of game two, thanks to Comeau's two-run job and a clutch two-run double by Dave Edwards. But Strange and relievers Dan O'Leary and Jeff Richardson combined for four walks, a single, an errant pickoff and a sacrifice fly in the sixth as the Rams scored four to win it, 7-6.

Saturday's action started with Ciaglo matched with Rhody ace Steve Birkett. They might still be pitching were it not for back-to-back throwing errors in the sixth that led to an unearned URI run, enough to dampen Ciaglo's gem, 1-0.

Ciaglo fanned 10 and walked just two. The Minutemen had a bid to tie it in the seventh, after Comeau singled. But pinch runner Kevin Correa was thrown out at the plate trying to score on Brian Bright's single and the ensuing outfield error.

In game two, UMass got a split behind the pitching of Brian Conroy (a four-hitter, three walks and six K's) and a pair of dingers by Steve Kern to take a 6-1 win.

Softball drops one before tournament gets washed out

UMass sunk, 5-1

By SAM SILVERSTEIN

Before the nasty rain cloud that has dogged this spring's schedule made its way to Garden City, NY over the weekend — washing out much of the planned Adelphi Tournament — the University of Massachusetts softball squad drizzled through seven innings against the host school Saturday.

Adelphi sent the Minutewomen home with a 5-1 defeat to remember the weekend by, as UMass' scheduled games against Connecticut, nationally-ranked South Carolina and Penn State were lost in the rain.

The Minutewomen will leave their bags on the bus for tomorrow's doubleheader with Atlantic 10-rival Rhode Island. A doubleheader between these two squads a couple of weeks back was, you guessed it, rained out.

Saturday's loss dropped the Minutewomen to 9-13, and stretched their recent losing slide to three games, while Adelphi improved to 13-11.

Adelphi hurler Chris Gage allowed the Minutewomen their only run of the game on a pair of hits in the top of the first inning. Cherie DellAnno singled, reached second base on a sacrifice, and scored on a Chris Wanner single.

From there however, Gage took over, no-hitting UMass through the remaining six innings while her teammates retaliated offensively for five runs and the win.

"It was just a sloppy first inning," described Adelphi assistant coach Jane Ficke. "It was very difficult playing in the rain, and UMass just couldn't get a hit after that."

Adelphi siezed the lead for good in the bottom of the third, playing a UMass error and four singles into a 3-1 lead. Les Perkins was the most damaging Panther, knocking in two of those runs with a bases loaded single.

The score stood frozen at 3-1 until the seventh, when a similar error-single-single flurry settled the score at 5-1 (and gave Perkins her third and fourth runs batted in of the day).

Tomorrow's opponent, the Lady Rams, have managed to sneak in 23 games this season, losing 15 (URI stood at 2-2 in the A-10 heading into a double date with Rutgers Sunday). Outfielder Rubina Carver has carried the club offensively with a .345 average.

Palestinian rally divides students

By MARIA SACCHETTI
and JOHN SWANSON

The Palestinian-Israeli conflict issue divided more than 100 University of Massachusetts students who attended a rally yesterday for Palestinian rights on the steps of the Student Union building.

The demonstration was sparked by Israeli attacks on Palestinians in the town of Nahallin last week which claimed several lives. Arab-Jewish relations have been strained for thousands of years, most notably since 1947 when the United Nations partitioned western Palestine into Jewish and Arab states.

The rally was punctuated by shouting matches in the crowd and a counterdemonstration organized by the UMass Student Alliance for Israel.

Jamal Aruri, a University student who spoke at the rally, said he was angered by the counterprotestors, who brandished signs and an Israeli flag.

"I have relatives in the occupied territory who are tortured, shot at, and imprisoned," he said, addressing the counterprotestors. "Don't tell me about your Israeli democracy — there's no democracy for Palestinians."

Student Senator Jason Rabinowitz said Israeli forces are killing people in the name of Judaism.

"Some call me a self-hating, anti-Semitic Jew," he said. "I'm for black rights. Does that make me a self-hating white? I'm for gay rights, does that make me a self-hating straight man?"

CAG Board votes to hold new election

Last week's election invalidated

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Area Governing Board voted overwhelmingly yesterday to invalidate last week's elections for commuter area president, citing procedural technicalities as the basis for the decision.

Of the 15-member board, eight attended yesterday's meeting and voted unanimously with two abstentions to schedule a new election for next Thursday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in front of the Hatch cafeteria.

Last Tuesday, Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes defeated Ted Chambers and Robb Smith by four votes, which appeared to clear their way to the CAG presidency.

However, the Smith/Chambers campaign immediately contested the election. They claimed negative campaigning, which included allegations that the pair denounced spring pond concerts, severely damaged their bid for the presidency.

"There was a massive amount of negative campaigning based on blatant lies," Chambers said. "There are people who are out to get us." He added that the Reilly/Zarganes campaign was not linked to the negative events and blamed a third party for the situation.

Chambers and Smith petitioned the board for a new election but their opponent Tim Reilly said a second vote is unfair and would not halt the negative campaigning.

"The negative campaigning is just going to get worse," Reilly said, adding that members of his campaign were also victimized by a third party, who he said called him a "fascist" and his campaign workers "bimbos."

Reilly's co-candidate Alex Zarganes did not attend the meeting and could not be reached for comment.

Senate Speaker John Dunlap urged the board to dismiss claims of negative campaigning, which he said was a "non-issue" because it has no consitutional basis and instead focuses on technical errors made during the voting process.

Brian Crawford, a board member, said at least one person from the Greek area, which is not included in the CAG district, voted in the election. Election workers also failed to check the credit status of voting continuing education students, who must carry at least 12 credits to be eligible to vote, he said.

Board members said the errors coupled with the slim margin of victory compelled them to order that a new election be held. Members also cited past events where dubious results prompted a second election, and added that these precedents must be upheld.

"If there were any tinge of issue in an election, I'd say, 'get a new one,'" said member Liz Hart. "There's more than a tinge here."

Passover celebration starts tonight

By BETH O'TOOLE
Collegian Correspondent

Passover, the celebration of the Jewish escape from enslavement in Egypt, begins tonight and lasts seven days. According to Yehudit Heller, a spokesperson for the University of Massachusetts Hillel Foundation, Jews were slaves for 400 years before fleeing Egypt and then enduring a 40-year exodus in the desert.

Passover begins with the Seder. This celebration is a meal on the first and second nights of Passover, when families eat special foods and tell the story of being slaves and becoming free, said Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

One of the foods is matzoh, or unleavened bread. Matzoh symbolizes the fact that, in fleeing Egypt, Jews wanted to take their bread with them, but could not allow it to rise, Heller said.

"The theme [of Passover] is still very important and very current," Perlmutter said. "Many people, for example, connect Passover with the enslavement and murder of the Jewish people in the Holocaust and the subsequent establishment of the state of Israel — where those

Coroner rules Abbie Hoffman's death a suicide

By the Associated Press

WORCESTER — Activist Abbie Hoffman's death was a suicide caused by an overdose of barbiturates mixed with alcohol, a coroner said yesterday.

As many as 50 phenobarbital tablets and alcohol were found in Hoffman's system, his brother, Jack Hoffman, said at a hastily called news conference at El Morocco restaurant in the activist's native city.

"He was asleep before he went into a comatose stage," he said. "He felt no pain."

He said it was not yet known whether the combination was accidental or intentional. "Abbie, as many of you know, was somewhat careless with pills and we always warned him about this kind of thing," he said.

But Bucks County, Pa., coroner Dr. Thomas Rosko rules the death a suicide.

Rosko said Hoffman, 52, killed himself with a "massive overdose of a prescription drug" in his New Hope, Pa., apartment on April 12. Friends and family members had said that Hoffman had been in pain from a recent automobile accident.

The coroner also said laboratory tests showed that two other drugs were present in Hoffman's system. Rosko said they were in small amounts and had no connection with his death.

Phenobarbital is a long-acting sedative and also an anticonvulsant commonly used to treat epilepsy.

Friends both famous and obscure were headed to this industrial city today to mourn Hoffman in a memorial service at Temple Emanuel. The service will be preceded by a noontime peace march, Jack Hoffman said.

"He loved Worcester," said his brother. "I could never understand why. He used to argue about it."

In the week since his death, newspapers have editorialized about the antics that scandalized and tickled Americans, such as burning money at the New York Stock Exchange and naming his book "Steal This Book." Vandals spray-painted "steal this courthouse" on a building where he underwent a celebrated trial with Amy Carter, daughter of former President Carter, for their arrests during a 1986 demonstration.

His family has been flooded with letters, telegrams, and condolence calls from entertainers, the Carter family, even foreign embassies, his brother said. "I'm not going to say which (embassies)," he said. "Let's just say some of our NATO friends."

In keeping with his career, Hoffman's family has planned a noon peace march today from his mother's house to the synagogue he attended as a child, where a memorial service will be held.

"I want it to be a celebration," Hoffman said. "I want everybody to be singing and swinging and swaying."

Folksinger Pete Seeger volunteered to lead the march and sing protest songs, he said. "This is so fitting," he said. "It all began in a basement here on Ruth Street listening to (Seeger)."

Hoffman cut his political teeth in this central Massachusetts city, helping to found a now-thriving social services agency in a storefront and leading black workers in job-discrimination marches.

Red light an alternative to pesticides

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

With pesticide and other chemical use coming under increased scrutiny in US food production, a University of Massachusetts professor may have found a way to replace some of those growth regulators by using light.

Since the early '70s Lyle Craker, a plant physiologist, has been using different wavelengths of red light to control the "break strength" of fruit and leaf stems, he said.

Break strength is defined as the amount of force needed to cause a stem to separate from the parent plant, he said.

"We're trying to develop alternate technologies for controlling plant growth so we don't have to use chemical compounds on the plants," he said.

Craker has been experimenting in his Stockbridge Hall laboratory with small, two-branched plants and has found that the break strength of stems increases when exposed to visible red light. This means the leaves, or fruit, stay on the parent plant longer, he said.

If the plants are exposed to far red light, invisible to the human eye, the break strength decreases causing the leaves to fall off the main plant earlier, Craker said.

These findings are important for produce farmers because growth-regulating chemicals such as Alar may be rendered obsolete, he said.

"The writing's on the wall that pesticides and growth regulators won't be allowed anymore. That doesn't mean I think they're harmful, but the public will demand it — that's how I read the papers," Craker said.

This is especially encouraging for apple growers in New England who have been forced to stop using Alar (which causes ripe apples to stay on the tree longer allowing for more economical harvesting) because processing companies like Very Fine will no longer buy apples grown with Alar, said John Clark, a UMass pesticide toxicologist.

Craker, whose original research was aided by a grant from GTE laboratories and also by Dr. Duane Greene from the department of plant and soil sciences, said he and his team are ready to go back out into the field to continue experiments using apple trees but funding has become a problem.

If the money does appear, Craker believes that two or three more years of experimentation would be all that is required to prove the technology works, he said.

Until then, Craker will continue working in the lab to determine more precisely which wavelengths of light work best to both cause and prevent fruit drop and how much time these wavelengths need to be applied, he said.

Flasher arrested for lewdness

Man cited in two separate incidents

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

A 28-year-old Farmington, Conn., man was arrested Monday on charges of open and gross lewdness, police said.

The man allegedly confronted two women in E lot at the Stadium and exposed himself to them. The women were able to give police a description of the man and his vehicle.

He was stopped on Massachusetts Avenue and subsequently arrested. Police linked the man to the incident on April 5 when two women reported a man approached them in lot 22 and exposed himself to them.

The man was also arrested on charges of operating a vehicle after his driver's license had been suspended, police said.

In other police reports:

- A student reported the tailgate was stolen from his pickup truck Friday while the truck was parked in lot 22. The tailgate was valued at $500.
- A vehicle parked in Fraternity/Sorority Park Friday was broken into and an attempt was made to steal the stereo system, police said. Damage to the vehicle was estimated at $300.
- Residents of Cutback City reported derogatory remarks were spraypainted on the shacks Friday.
- A representative from the Legal Studies Center reported cash and bags of candy stolen from a desk drawer Friday.
- A woman and a man, both 19-year-old residents of Washington residence hall were arrested Friday on Fearing Street on charges of being minors in possession of alcohol, police said.
- A 26-year-old resident of John Quincy Adams residence hall was arrested Saturday on charges of operating while under the influence of alcohol after a vehicle check was conducted by police in lot 26, police said.
- A Coolidge resident woke up late Saturday night and noticed the lights were on in and saw a man leaving the room. The victim said the room had been "rifled through" and $110 had been stolen. The victim was able to provide police with a description of the intruder.

Pornography criticized by radical feminist

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Pornography, a business that grosses $8 to $10 billion dollars a year, increases bigotry, violence toward women and peoples' inability to see rape as a crime, said Andrea Dworkin, a leading radical feminist, in a lecture recently at Smith College.

In 1984, Dworkin co-authored a piece of Indianapolis legislation defining pornography as a violation of women's civil rights, which was later found unconstitutional by two judges, she said.

"One judge said he agreed that pornography increases rape and violence," Dworkin said. "But he said that shows the power of pornography as a form of speech, and therefore it is protected by the first amendment."

Dworkin said the problem with pornographic magazines and films is that women are pictured as enjoying whatever violent or painful acts to which they are subjected.

"A woman is hurt in every way imagined and unimagined [in pornographic materials]," Dworkin said. "She becomes an active participant of her own degredation."

Dworkin, who has studied the impacts of pornography on women for the past 18 years, cited cases of Black women being portrayed as enjoying assaults derived from their skin color, but said that probably the cruellest pornography in the United States uses Asian women.

"[This pornography] starts out where other pornography ends," she said. "There's a giant market of boys who went to Vietnam and came back losers, and are out to show these women who's boss."

Dworkin said pornography has contributed to an increase in marital rape and an increase in crimes of violence against women in the streets, through movies like Deep Throat, which Dworkin said treat rape as a form of entertainment.

"Today, a rapist [who films a rape] is not afraid of punishment, because he has a commercial item, not evidence of a crime."

Dworkin, author of Pornography: Men Possessing Women and Woman Hating, said the answer that society gives to people who claim that pornography is destructive to women is "prove it."

"What do you [society] consider proof" Dworkin asked. "If not atrocity, battery, rape, assault, objectification, murder, and torture, then what?"

Dworkin said the only way to reach pornographers is to change the world around them.

"They are going to have to contend with the voices of women who have been prostituted," she said. "We will do it."

Marine research gets OK

UMass receives $50,000 for research program

By BRIAN PURCELL
Collegian Correspondent

After four years of negotiation, the University of Massachusetts recently became the site of a marine research program that will enable faculty and graduate students to pursue projects in marine biology.

According to Dr. Joseph S. Larson, director of the UMass Environmental Institute, the reason for the lengthy negotiation with the National Marine Fisheries Service was a reduction in federal agency spending on smaller programs under the Reagan Administration.

The NMFS, part of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under the US Department of Commerce, gave approval for the program on March 13.

"The marine area is one that has tremendous opportunity at the University," Larson said. The new program will involve a wide range of research possibilities in the field of marine biology, including resource economics, statistical analysis, and computer programming, he said.

The NMFS is scheduled to provide an annual fund of $50,000, allowing University researchers to gain experience through projects designated by the NMFS, Larson said.

The NMFS should benefit financially because the cost of hiring private researchers would be high, Larson said. "Somewhere between 35 and 45 faculty members here are involved in marine-related research," he said.

In addition to faculty involvement, there are a number of students involved in research at the NMFS Northeast Fishery Center in Woods Hole, Cape Cod, Larson said.

Sexual Awareness Week begins

Pi Kappa Alpha, in conjunction with University Health Services, is sponsoring Sexual Awareness Week, held today through April 22, according to Srivinas Gainedy, co-philanthropy chairman for the fraternity.

Activities planned for the week include information tables on the Campus Center Concourse today and Friday. Gainedy said that brochures on STDs and AIDS will be handed out and condoms given for a small donation. The proceeds for the donations will go to DigniLife of Westfield, which has a home for local AIDS patients, according to Gainedy.

On Thursday night, from 6 to 8 p.m., the tables will go to the lobbies of John Quincy Adams, Coolidge, Van Meter and Cashin residence halls, he added.

What is and isn't right with the right

Some campus Republicans don't like the Minuteman

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Registered Republican Michelle Ruby doesn't think the Republican Club represents the opinions of most conservative students at the University of Massachusetts.

"Their intent may have been good, but as far as their actions, I feel that they get carried away," Ruby said. "It's a good idea to get together for party ideals, but the far, far right has taken over."

Many Republicans on campus feel their views are not accurately portrayed or heard by either the club or the conservative newspaper The Minuteman. Though Republican and conservative views are outnumbered at UMass, there is much attention given to them.

Recently, fights between the Republican Club, the Student Government Association, the Spartacus League, the Liberator, and The Minuteman have drawn campus attention to this edge of the political spectrum.

Ruby said she believes the image of republicans on this campus is not positive. "You say you're a Republican and everyone flinches. I'm not a [W.] Greg Rothman or an Ollie North, I just have Republican viewpoints. I'm not evil," she said.

> "We try and just be controversial enough so people will read us to see what we stand for. The way we write sometimes offends people, but we wouldn't have as much of a readership if we didn't."
> –Brian Darling, contributing editor of the Minuteman

Brian Darling, a member of the Republican Club and the Minuteman staff, said conservative views are stifled at the University.

"I always thought that people were more tolerant of conservative views," he said. "I thought this was a liberal, open-minded campus, but there is no acceptance of conservative beliefs."

The Republican Club itself has several counts of assault and harassment pending against them. It has been condemned for its violent and extreme reactions to other political organizations on campus. Last year the administration officially removed them from their office in the Student Union and revoked their status as a registered student organization.

Doug VanValkenburg, a self-proclaimed conservative United States officer, was dissatisfied with some of these events and their effect on the Republican students on this campus. "[Members of the Republican Club] don't act as true conservatives would act. They have degraded themselves to the extent that they mimic radicals in tactics."

Republican Club member Scott Garstka defended the club's poor campus image, saying, "We are viewed unjustly. The Republican Club is a persecuted group that has to defend itself. Most liberals don't like Rothman because he comes off as too intense."

Darling agreed the club is not received well by Republicans and other students.

"Our image isn't as good as it should be. Some of our tactics haven't been too popular. The press hasn't done anything to help the situation by sensationalizing."

The Minuteman publication has also received bad publicity for its parodies and articles which have been viewed as racist and homophobic. On April 4th, Minuteman staff members apologized, at an open meeting organized by a Southeast Asian student group, for the racially offensive items that appeared in recent issues.

VanValkenburg said the material printed in the Minuteman is a poor reflection of the views of Republicans on campus.

"If the Republicans wanted to create a newspaper with conservative news to counteract the Collegian's slanted views, they should have created a paper similar to the Collegian, with a more serious manner. It's not taken seriously because of the way that it's written," he said.

Ruby said she does not give the Minuteman much credit.

"It's very unprofessional, too radical, unbelievably crude and socially unaware," she said. "They may have the right to print anything, but they should have some tact."

Not all Republicans feel the Minuteman lacks journalistic integrity. Pete Kozel, a UMass conservative student, said, "The Minuteman has original and well-written articles on national and international news. It deserves to be read because it expresses other points of view."

Darling said the Minuteman is well-read even though it frequently contains controversial material.

"We try and just be controversial enough so people will read us to see what we stand for," he said. "The way we write sometimes offends people, but we wouldn't have as much of a readership if it didn't."

Another stumbling block for Republicans on campus has been their relationships with other political groups. There have been many well-publicized run-ins between the Republican Club members and the Spartacus League members, the Young Communist League, the Radical Student Union, the Liberator writers and the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance.

The Spartacus League and the Republican Club filed assault charges against each other after a clash at a Spartacus League discussion forum on Feb. 9. A pretrial hearing was scheduled for March 28.

On March 14, Republican Club members were involved in an incident where club member Paul McGonnigal removed the flag that the Radical Student Union had taped to the floor symbolizing their protest of a Supreme Court case. The case questions the right of a flag to be desecrated.

> "If the Republicans wanted to create a newspaper with conservative news to counteract the Collegian's slanted views, they should have created a paper similar to the Collegian with a more serious manner."
> –Conservative Doug VanValkenburg

Ex-LBGA president Jay Festa threatened to file charges against the Minuteman, which has many Republican Club members on its staff, for allegedly threatening him in a publication. Festa later dropped the charges.

The latest in a series of incidents involved charges of harassment filed by Ted Chambers and Robb Smith, the creators of the Liberator against Republican club members. Chambers and Smith claimed to have been threatened and harassed while they were distributing their publication. A decision is expected to be reached this week.

Darling accounted for the number of incidents involving the Republican Club and the Minuteman by saying, "We're the only conservative group on campus. We receive much animosity and provocation. It's a natural effect. We are the focal point of their anger."

All of these incidents do not do much for the Republican image on campus. What do some Republicans think of these other political organizations?

"[The actions of] the Radical Student Union are absolutely despicable. I despise it," VanValkenburg commented. "But the Republican Club just lets its agenda be done by its reactions to liberals."

Ruby said that, "The Liberator was just as unprofessional as the Minuteman."

Garstka described the Young Communist League and the Spartacist League as "ultra-liberal. Most Republicans are worried about America and hate to see things like the Spartacus incident, though everyone should and does have their own opinion," he said.

Said Darling: "Only at UMass would we have organizations like the YCL [Young Communist League]. They probably have eight followers in Massachusetts and seven of them are probably from UMass. They are reactionary and violent. I don't have a problem with the RSU or the existence of the LBGA, though I don't agree with homosexuality. These groups have every right to exist."

Though other Republicans that were interviewed differed in their opinions on other political groups on campus, they all agreed that the faculty here is overwhelmingly liberal.

VanValkenburg said the faculty should reserve its political views and teach with facts rather than opinions. He also said many professors harbor a bias against the military which was reflected in the liberal teaching.

"The faculty reflects the liberal majority on campus. Even the chancellor is liberal," Garstka commented.

Brian Darling was the most vocal in expressing his dismay with the liberalness of professors.

"I've had so many teachers who are crazy, who aren't espousing mainstream views," he said. "Every department, except for maybe the Department of Sports Management, is way, way to the left. I attribute the liberal campus image to its professors."

Not all Republicans agree with the representation they receive through either the Republican Club or the Minuteman. On the other hand, members of the Republican Club and the Minuteman claim that they have to act as they do, simply to have their conservative viewpoints heard.

Bad press hurts city's effort to rebuild

NEW BEDFORD — This city has seen better days. The glory of the fishing port that Herman Melville used as a setting for his masterpiece about seafarers has extinguished with the whaling industry.

Where once rugged, brave whalers traded anecdotes about year-long sea expeditions, residents conscious of the headlines of the day now share whodunit theories.

Pedro Pereira

The craft of a suspected serial killer, whom authorities believe is responsible for the eight female corpses that have recently turned up in highways outside the city, has sneaked into conversations at downtown bars and outdoors hangouts.

But by no means is it the only or the major topic of conversation. City dwellers have carried on their lives unaltered in spite of the killings, in spite of the bold headlines from all corners of New England that have splashed black ink on the Southeastern Massachusetts city that 100,000 call home.

A headline that reads "Seventh body found outside New Bedford" could easily persuade one to believe city residents are walking around looking over their shoulders. One could easily be persuaded that this dangerous city should remain at as much of a distance as one can keep it.

Like imagining that strolling through Washington D.C., "the murder capital," means risking one's life, picturing New Bedford as a gloomy, sinful place gives a certain satisfaction. A satisfaction borne of a need to believe that out there life just isn't as rosy and the world just isn't as attractive.

We all need scapegoats.

Sure we the residents of New Bedford, at least those who care enough to, resent the bad publicity that plagues our hometown. And we say so. And the outside newspapers, out of duty, sprinkle their coverage of the murders with feature stories quoting neighborhood activists who say the publicity has driven them to distraction.

And residents have good reason to feel resentment. We're conscious of the city's struggle in recent years to rise from the post-industrial age coma in which the technology era has left older US cities. New Bedford has made a valiant effort to recover.

Boarded-up brick structures that once housed textile and clothing factories have been converted into outlets for such renowned molders of fashion as Alexander Julian and Calvin Klein. Condominiums have emerged in rehabilitated old two-story buildings and in fields where yellow grass once grew tall. The city has in recent years been able to boast of being the country's most productive fishing port.

New Bedford certainly does not qualify as a paradise, but one ought to keep in perspective the city has fallen victim to a non-dicriminatory disease. After all, serial killings have stained better reputations, including that of San Diego and Seattle.

The spotlight enlightens, but it also burns. And New Bedford residents learned this some five years ago in the aftermath of a highly sensationalized gang rape.

Other unflattering headlines will probably run, for the appearance of a ninth cadaver is possible. But for us it will be just another headline marking another day.

Saying "buy" to the shopper's high

I'm sitting here in my brand new, chic black jacket with the gold buttons and hip high-waisted skirt. I look great. I feel as brand new as my outfit, like I could go out and snag any man I wanted. I'm still under the influence. I'm high as a kite. I'm flying. But don't go calling the Hotelden Clinic. It's not alcohol.

Julie Kotsifas

I have Shopper's High.

A couple of months ago, I was feeling really low. I'd go shopping every weekend, as usual, but being the requisite Dirt-Poor-College-Student, I never had enough money to buy anything. I could only stare longingly in the window at all the latest fashions, sighing and growing more depressed as I beheld my (fashionably) ripped jeans. I'll tell you, it hurts.

Then, I got my credit card. A whole new world opened up for me.

Of course, I could never get a credit card of my own. Oh, I've tried, of course. Rejection. Visa just won't give a $1000 spending limit to a student with $1.21 in her savings account. The only card I was able to acquire was a Sears' card (And we all know what a wealth of haute couture Sears has. The Cheryl Tiegs line is so cool.)

So, faced with all this intolerable stress and depression, I begged Dad to get me some plastic. "For emergencies," I said. "Every college student needs one," I added.

Well, that perfectly fitting pair of jeans is an emergency isn't it? That gorgeous silk kimono at half price is a college necessity, right? And those really great cowboy boots? How about the one-of-a-kind leather skirt?

Having a credit card has really improved my attitude. Just seeing that green (American Express card, not cash! Cash is so passe!) puts a smile on my face. Picture the scene: You're on North Pleasant St. taking a harmless, window-shopping stroll. You see a beautiful sweater at Benetton and your face falls. Then you remember — American Express. Oh, you do have money! You have the card. "Charge it," you tell the salesperson ecstatically.

Everything was going great until I started getting the bills in the mail. Oh, you mean I have to pay for all of these clothes? W-W-with m-m-m-money?

I know that having a credit card isn't good for me, but clothes are my fix. Some people do drugs. Some people are addicted to alcohol. I do clothes. And I do them well, as American Express can tell you.

A credit card is like my own little pocket-size boyfriend. "Oh, I love this Calvin Klein skirt!" I think as I twirl before the dressing room mirror.

"Buy it," my pocket AMEX Amour answers, peeping his engraved plastic head outside of the Gucci wallet he bought me. "I'll buy it for you," he tempts me.

That's all I need to hear.

A few days ago, my "boyfriend" said he'd buy me a sweater I had to have, so I took him out of the Gooch and gave him to the clerk, settling back to enjoy the ensuing high.

"I'm sorry Miss," the salesperson broke through my reverie, "but your card's over the limit." Then she gave me a look like I was the person who had hijacked PanAm 103.

Oh dear, how embarrassing. "Wow, I guess that Porsche cost more than I thought," I reply gracefully, once again, broke.

Oh well, at least I look like I have money. That's the important thing right?

But now I'm looking for a new love. My "boyfriend" is no good to me now. Especially since my father cut him into a million pieces, all the while lecturing me about the hazards of American Express. Hey, how about Master Card? Visa? I wonder what kind of limit I can get?

A friend who is out of her element

I think I need to find a new crowd. It's not that I don't like the people I hang out with now, they're great friends and are fun to go out with. The problem is — they're engineers. I'm a communications major. Sometimes, we just don't mix well.

Take dinner for example. I'd go down to the DC with a group of my engineering friends. The conversation would start, and my problems would begin.

Aimee S. Tesney

They'd look at each other with devilish gleams in their eyes and start talking about, ugh, calculus. Or physics. Or, worst of all, some alien thing known to me only as "thermo." I was confused at first. I didn't think winter underwear was so complex that it needed all those strange equations and stuff.

After a semester of boggling my brain while attempting to decipher dinner conversation, I gave up. I began to bring books to entertain myself. I tricked them this semester though — I got off of the meal plan. Now I eat with an education major who plans to teach kindergarden. Now that's more my level.

Another problem with engineers is that they keep very odd hours. My roommate, the Engineering Queen, gets up at sunrise to go to class. I loll about in bed 'til nine. She doesn't come home until after dinner. I'm back after my ten o'clock and there I stay. She goes up to the library until twelve. I read Stephen King novels until I nod off at eleven. If I want to talk to her, I make appointments.

Sigh. Those poor, overworked engineering students.

When people come into our room, they have no trouble figuring out whose stuff is whose. My side of the bookshelf is crammed with books. Real books, Madame Bovary, Farenheit 415, Calvin and Hobbes. HER side is smothered with textbooks: AUTOCAD, Fundamental of Engineering Thermodynamics, 1001 Physics Equations for All Occasions.

Yuck!

My laundry creeps threateningly out of my cubby. Her clothes are precisely folded and put away. The only place we have them fooled is where the computer is concerned. That's mine. I use it only for word processing, when I must. I despise the thing. I'm willing it to her when I die.

They do have a quality I envy though, they have no problem making conversation. Like, "You're in Physics 987 too? What did you think of the last test? . . . Yeah, that question about the rotation of the imaginary cylindrical object in a vacuum was really hard. I think the answer was three to the negative fifty-seventh over six z."

They may not talk like normal human beings, but it's a great way to make friends and meet guys. I don't know, guys just aren't impressed when I start talking about hegemonic theory or the social construction of reality. There may be some communications majors out there who know what I'm talking about, but I sure the heck can't find them.

Hmmmmmm. Maybe there's an opening in Fluid Mechanics. It's worth a shot. At least I'd be able to figure out what my friends are talking about.

Barely acknowledging Judaism

This week marks the start of Passover, which means I'll be celebrating a centuries-old Jewish holiday (commemorating Jewish freedom from slavery) with family an friends, as I have every spring for the past nineteen years.

At UMass though, any Jewish holiday means something else as well — missed classes. Even though I can't be punished for missing class for religious reasons (it's an excused absence), no technicality can make up for crucial discussions, notes and explanations — especially those near finals time.

For the near 4,000 Jews at UMass who have the nerve to want to be with their family on Rosh Hashana, Yom Kippur and Passover, UMass barely acknowledges their right to practice Judaism. Is this religious discrimination? Ethnocentrism? Ignorance?

In any case, it must stop. Passover celebrates freedom and family, but here, we don't even have the freedom to celebrate with family.

Not all students want cotton candy

In a Collegian story (April 10, "Dorm rooms to have cable television installed") Barri Jaffe, Food Services Coordinator, stated that she was involved in a survey determining demand for new foods. Jaffe said students expressed interest in, "cotton candy, caramel apples, gourmet jelly beans and fried dough."

What is this place a carnival? Maybe we could have a ring toss and duck shoot next to every cafeteria. She should take a look at the line at Earthfoods. It rivals registration! As a person who can not tolerate long lines, I usually venture into Food Service's domain. How about some good, ole non-fried potatoes, rice, baked chicken, anything decent for less than four bucks a meal.

Program receives $50,000 grant

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Labor/Management Workplace Education program has received a $50,000 grant for their "Next Step" initiative.

Fred Swan, manager of staff training and development for the division of human resources, said the Next Step program is designed for all UMass employees who have a high school education and wish to expand their learning further.

"We are calling the effort Next Step because employees now have the chance to build on basic [remedial] skills," he said.

The money, which was awarded by the Federal Workplace Literary Partnership Program, will be used to conduct workshops on such topics as creative thinking and problem solving, communication skills, self esteem, goal setting and motivation and personal and career development, Swan said.

Swan said the skills taught in the workshops are important because the workplace is becoming increasingly complicated and employees need more education than they did in the past.

"The workplace is changing such that those skills [taught in Next Step] can now be defined as basic skills. The labor intensive areas are primarily impacted by our programing," he said.

Swan cited a joint study by the American Society for Training and Development and the Department of Labor's Employment and Training Administration that said the skills similar to those taught in Next Step should now be considered basic skills in the workplace and not reserved for upper managers as they once were.

The grant, which will be matched by $15,000 from the University, was a joint effort between labor and management on campus and Swan applauded this action.

"Historically labor and management have been adversaries. Now you have a situation where labor and managment are saying what's good for the goose is good for the gander," he said.

who were in concentration camps could rebuild their lives in freedom."

"We think of the exodus in our own time of the Jews of Russia," he said.

Alison Buckholtz, a UMass sophomore and member of Hillel, said she spends the holiday with her family. "I go to a relative's house and there are about three or four families that get together," she said, adding that the Seder is a time for the entire family to enjoy their religion and tradition.

The program will be administered by the Environmental Institute, and will be guided by a joint UMass/NMFS Coordinating Committee, Larson said, adding that he and Vice Chancellor for Research Samuel F. Conti are the scheduled UMass representatives.

Jazz trio takes Iron Horse to Fringe of improv

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

There have been so many great concerts recently that I hope I don't run out of superlatives (or credibility, for that matter). Last Saturday's performance by the Boston-based trio The Fringe at the Iron Horse joined recent gigs by Steve Lacy and Fred Frith as some of the best live music I've ever heard. I left the Horse completely exhilarated, my voice hoarse and my palms red from drumming on my chair.

Like Henry Threadgill's Air, The Fringe is a sax/bass/drums trio that explores as much musical territory as possible with that small lineup. However, instead of Air's historical homages and more delicate sensibilities, The Fringe emphasizes controlled tension and raw energy - enough to power a major city. Most of The Fringe's music is totally improvised, relying on the musicians' virtuoso skills and telepathic communication rather than on pre-arranged tunes or arrangements.

Typical of their pieces was the last one in the first set, which was introduced simply as "John." It started with drummer Bob Gulotti and bassist John Lockwood improvising together, creating a pensive mood. Once the mood was established, tenor saxophonist George Garzone entered slowly and established a melodic frame of reference. Playing strongly and searchingly, he built up the tension. Gradually, the trio collectively turned up the intensity until, after ten or fifteen minutes, it reached majestic, cathartic proportions. They maintained this incredible energy level for awhile; finally, Garzone revealed who "John" was by climaxing the piece with the theme from John Coltrane's "Suite: Prayer and Meditation." The ensuing break between sets was much needed - the audience was as exhausted as the musicians.

Valley Jazz

In addition to working the crowd into a frenzy (literally: they were screaming during the Albert Ayler-like encore), The Fringe demonstrated how wide a range of sounds can be coaxed out of relatively few instruments. Lockwood used occasional echo effects with his bass, and Gulotti played Chinese gong and African slit drums in addition to his drum kit. Even with this spare instrumentation, they produced a great variety of colors and textures, sometimes through unorthodox means (such as Gulotti using Lockwood's bass bow on his gong). Although they used their auxiliary effects throughout the evening, they were especially effective on Gulotti's brooding "St. Lorenz Bay," one of two actual "tunes" the group played.

The Fringe's music could be called "avant-garde," but that term carries an unfortunate connotation of "nobody can understand it." However, they demonstrated a masterful ability to start each piece relatively accessibly, slowly draw the audience in and only take them into space when they are ready. Thus, the "out" passages had more meaning because they contrasted with the more "in" ones. The group's rapport with an audience (and amongst themselves) undoubtedly results from having played together for seventeen years.

This gig was easily the highlight of the Iron Horse's spring Jazz Fest. If you missed it (or if you saw it and want to hear more), you can catch them any Wednesday night at the Willow Jazz Club in Somerville. Also, they have a CD scheduled for release this summer: the title is Neanderthal Man, and it will be over 70 minutes of music on one disc.

Lunch a specialty for local Chinese restaurant

By TRACY CEURVELS
Collegian Correspondent

Panda East
Amherst

Panda East is an excellent, if not the best choice for Chinese fare in the Amherst area. The food is always delicious, the service is quick and attentive, and the restaurant always makes for pleasurable dining.

One of the best reasons for going to Panda East is the luncheon specials, which are served Monday-Saturday 11:30-3:00. The specials include a main dish, a choice of brown or white rice, and a choice of wonton, hot and sour or egg drop soup accompanied by what I call fried Chinese noodles. Two people can easily enjoy a wonderful lunch for about $8.00 as the luncheon specials range in price from $3.50-$4.75.

Included on the lunch menu are such entrees as chicken with broccoli, beef with garlic sauce, sweet and sour shrimp and some vegetarian dishes like Buddhist delight or broccoli with garlic sauce. Two of my personal favorites are shredded beef, szechuan style and the shrimp and chicken combination.

DINING OUT

Dinner at Panda East is also excellent and is served from 2:00-10:00 on Sundays, 3:00-10:00 Monday-Thursday and from 3:00-11:00 Friday and Saturday evenings. The appetizers range in price from $1.25 for a spring roll to $5.95 for 6 barbecue spare ribs. The wontons with hot sesame sauce ($3.50) is a hot and spicy dish that is very tasty. Six different soups are available including a delicious crab meat and chicken soup for two which costs $4.50.

As far as the main course is concerned, there are many dishes to choose from. There are 17 poultry dishes including moo shu chicken for $7.75 and chicken with spicy tea sauce for $7.75.

There are also a wide variety of pork, beef and seafood dishes. Seafood dishes include shrimp and scallops with garlic sauce for $9.50 and lobster cantonese for $12.95. Vegetarian dishes, health food meals and of course fried rice and lo mein are also served at Panda East.

Panda East offers 21 Chef's specialties. These are great if you want to try something a little unusual such as the Peking duck ($24.00) or the golden stuffed ham which is filled with a delicious fresh crab meat stuffing for $10.25.

All of the food at Panda East is delicious and the team of waiters works together wonderfully to offer great service. It is also very affordable, especially for lunch. Panda East is located at 103 North Pleasant St. in the center of Amherst. You won't be disappointed.

Little bluesman makes it big

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Staff

The folks at the Iron Horse said it: Lil' Ed and the Blues Imperials are "the wildest most electrifying blues band to play the Horse in some time." Thanks to the kindness of Lil' Ed, I was able to speak with the man as he and his brother Pookie practiced in a hotel room in Philadelphia, awaiting a gig.

I had to ask Lil' Ed why he plays at a place like the Iron Horse, as opposed to one of the bluesier venues in town."The company picks the club," he said.

It took Lil' Ed ten years to make it, working at a car-wash by day, playing the blues all over Chicago by night. Up till past the bands first album, Ed was still working there(the car wash)."It was a battle but now I feel great, you know like Tony the Tiger, I mean grrrreatbut I don't know..it all happened so suddenly," he said.

When Ed was growing up "there weren't nothing but the blues" and his uncle, the late J.B.Hutto, was a strong influence.

"There wasn't a nicer man you could meet, the one thing I always remember him saying is 'stay at it - never stop,' and I didn't."

Advice for other musicians? "Yeah, stay at it. If you let yourself down, nobody can pick you back up. No matter what you're playing, stay at it . . . someone will notice you," he commented. "It took us 10 years. You gotta use your own style, you have to play what you know. Most people are looking to copy, but the record companies aren't looking for copies. They want you, as you are."

Lil' Ed and the Blues Imperials were signed by Alligator Records, in particular Bruce Iglauer, who asked them to record a track for a compilation album. Hearing that one song, the Alligator founder knew he was on to something.

The Imperials' live show is hot. "I'm just having fun, Ed says, "but I get a little scared sometimes 'cause Mike's a little wild," (referring to to the portion of the show where he climbs up on rhythm guitarist Mike Garrett's shoulders).

"I'm trying to keep the people moving around. When the audience moves I get crazy. I need them to get crazy like they need me to get crazy . . . if you want some good, gut-bucket blues, check us out."

Lil' Ed and the Blues Imperials play the Iron Horse Coffeehouse tonight. Show starts at 8:30. All ages welcome.

The Residential Arts Program will present the works of Boston artist Ellen Banks from April 27 - May 7 in the Hampden Gallery in Southwest. A reception will run from 5 to 7 p.m. on May 4. This exhibit is in conjunction with the UMass Black Musicians Conference which will be held May 1 - 6.

Ellen Banks uniquely incorporates the compositions of Bach, Beethoven, Debussy and others, and reworks them into a visual reality on the canvas. The notes and scores of the compositions are translated in the form of geometric shapes and strongly defined lines.

Banks studied with Hans Jaffe in 1983, who is a scholar of the early 20th century De Stijl art movement which highlighted the work of Modrian's restricted compositions of rectangles and primary colors. Banks' art has been exhibited at the Boston Antheneum, Wellesley College, Akin Gallery in Boston, The Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, Simmons College and foreign countries such as Brazil, Bulgaria and Ireland.

Gallery hours are 3 to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 2 to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

■ Palestinian rally

At one point in the rally, an unidentified person tore down the Palestinian flag that was taped to the pillar beside the podium, but it was soon recovered and replaced.

> "Don't tell me about your Israeli democracy –there's no democracy for Palestinians."
> – Jamal Aruri

Alisa Berkowitz, an alliance member, said those who support the state of Israel do not necessarily denounce the Palestinians' claim to self-determination.

"The situation that Israel is in right now is a very difficult one," she said. "In Israel itself, there are so many people who don't support what the Israeli government is doing, but they do support the right of a Jewish state to exist."

The rally was sponsored by the UMass Palestinian Solidarity Committee, the Third World Foreign Students Opinion, the Black Agenda, the Young Communist League, and Jews Against Zionism, a newly-formed student organization.

One Palestinian student, who refused to give his name because he feared repercussions from anti-Palestinian groups, said Israeli officials will never find peace unless they consent to negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, headed by Yasir Arafat.

During his speech, the counterdemonstrators began to sing "Hatikva," the Israeli national anthem, their voices growing louder in an attempt to drown out his words.

Aaron Silverman, another alliance member, said "Zionism is Jewish nationalism. They [supporters of Palestine] have twisted the meaning of the word, saying we don't want a Palestinian state, and that's just not true."

Coast Guard searching for two sailors

BOSTON (AP) — Long-range search planes flew low over the Atlantic Ocean as 23 rescued sailors nursed minor bruises and awaited word on the fate of two crewman still missing yesterday, a day after their ship sunk in stormy seas.

Three of the US Coast Guard's long-range aircraft and several merchant vessels fanned out over 480 square miles of ocean about 400 miles southeast of Cape Cod, where Britain's Star of Alexandria went down early Monday.

"We feel they're still out there or else we wouldn't be searching," said Chief Petty Officer Joe Gibson of the Coast Guard's New York headquarters.

Meanwhile, Gibson said a Coast Guard cutter arrived midday at the search site to collect the rescued crewmen from the Ravenscraig, the British freighter that plucked them from 12-foot seas.

"We'll make the transfer as soon as weather allows, but for right now it's still pretty rough out there," Gibson said.

The sailors were to be brought to an undetermined port in the United States once the search ended, which Gibson said likely would be tomorrow.

"The crew will be interviewed as to what happened on the ship and then the company that owned the ship will take care of it from there," Petty Officer Gary Rives said.

He said it still was unclear what caused the sinking, in which the 23 multi-nationl rescued crew members sustained minor injuries.

College trust fund rules approved

BOSTON (AP) — The Education committee recommended legislation yesterday under which state college presidents and administrators would face fines and risk losing control of college trust funds if they violate fund guidelines.

The bill, a combination of measures proposed by lawmakers, is a response to the perceived abuse of state college trust fund money. One case cited occurred in 1986 when a trust fund at Westfield State College was used to buy the silence of a student who had accused the college president of sexual harassment.

Other examples of alleged trust fund abuse include charges that the funds were used for private travel by administrators and their spouses and to make contributions to political causes.

"What we're after is to provide the flexibility in the use of those funds within very clear, strong guidelines and in the event of violation of those guidelines, very clear accountability and penalties," said state Rep. Stanley Rosenberg, D-Amherst.

Under the Rosenberg bill, a college faculty member, dean or president could pay a fine of up to $2,000 for violating rules governing trust funds. The rules themselves have been put together by a special commission appointed by the state Board of Regents in Higher Education.

In addition, anyone found after a civil court action to have violated the guidelines could be required to pay double damages. For example, if an administrator charged a $2,000 trip to a trust fund in violation of rules, the administrator could be required to pay $4,000 in damages.

Court rules Paramount not liable for murder committed by film viewer

BOSTON (AP) — Paramount Pictures and a local movie theater are not responsible for the death of a teen-ager who was knifed by a young man who had just seen the 1979 film "The Warriors," the state's highest court ruled yesterday.

The victim's family had filed suit against Paramount and the Saxon Theatre Corp., seeking damages on the grounds of wrongful death. They charged that Paramount and the theater knew that "The Warriors" was inciting violence around the country.

In Superior Court, Judge Harold Flannery dismissed the suit on the grounds that the movie-maker and theater had no "special relationship" to the dead youth and therefore had no duty to protect him from his attacker.

When the family appealed, the state Supreme Court decided to hear the case. In a unanimous ruling written by Justice Francis O'Connor, the high court upheld the dismissal but added that the defendants were protected by constitutional rights.

"Although the film is rife with violent scenes, it does not at any point exhort, urge, entreat, solicit or overtly advocate or encourage unlawful or violent activity on the part of viewers," O'Connor wrote. "It does not create the likelihood of inciting or producing 'imminent lawless action' that would strip the film of First Amendment protection."

The suit was filed in 1981 by William Yakubowicz on behalf of his dead son, Martin, against Paramount and Saxon.

The complaint charged that 16-year-old Martin died from a knife would inflicted on the night on Feb. 15, 1979, by Michael Barrett, who was returning from seeing "The Warriors" as Saxon's theater on Tremont Street in Boston.

According to court records, two other youths has been killed near theaters showing "The Warriors" in Palm Springs and Oxnard, Calif., just three days before Yakubowicz was stabbed in Boston. That same week, Paramount officers advised theaters showing the film to hire security guards and offered to pay for them.

On Feb. 15, 1979, Barrett and two friends bought liquor and smuggled it into the Saxon theater. They sat through two showings, and Barrett became so drunk that he passed out during the second showing.

Afterward, Barrett and his friends headed home to the Dorchester section of Boston by way of the Park Street subway station. At the station, they encountered another group of Dorchester teen-agers, including Yakubowicz.

As the subway approached the Fields Corner stop, Barrett began taunting Yakubowicz and said, "I want you, I'm going to get you," imitation a line from the movie. At the station, a melee broke out, and Yakubowicz was fatally stabbed.

After viewing the film themselves, the Supreme Court justices rejected the family's argument that "The Warriors" was an incitement to illegal violence. For that reason, the court held Paramount blameless in making it and Saxon blameless in showing it.

Correa stopping at third. Correa then got his second run of the day on DiSarcina's grounder to second.

The Catamounts made no serious threat after that, getting only one more run, that coming in the seventh on a solo dinger by Steve Mammola. UMass wound up with a 9-4 win in the first game.

The second game was somewhat predictable in that the Minutemen, if they lost, would remain .500. In the spirit of averageness, UMass dropped the tail-end of the double-header to log a record of (surprise!) 14-14.

Vermont struck early and often, racking UMass starter Rich Graham (0-3, 7.71) for eight runs in the first three innings. He was replaced in favor of Bill Vickers with two out in the third. Vickers managed to hold the line until giving up a one-run shot in the sixth, but the deficit proved to be too much ground for the Minutemen to cover.

They did try, however. UMass got one run in the first when Dave Edwards was hit by a pitch from Catamount starter Dana Perrotte and scored on a Seccafico triple. They added two more in the second when catcher Lou Olivieri got his first collegiate four-bagger. The Minutemen chipped in three more in the fifth when Seccafico scored on a fielder's choice, followed by Comeau on a double by Chambers who also scored, on a double by Olivieri.

UMass missed on many opportunities to close the gap, like when they had runners on second and third with one out in the third, but they failed to take advantage of them.

Tomorrow the Minutemen will be forced to break their tendency toward an even record as they play a single game at Springfield College. Hopefully for UMass, they end up on the positive side of .500.

The losses might also have been attributed to the fact that several A-10 schools offer as many as six scholarships to players while UMass offers none.

"We were disappointed," said senior Karen McShane, "but we knew we were not on the same level as many of those teams."

In yesterday's action, UMass ran into another tough team, as UConn helped even the Minutewomen's record at 3-3.

UConn came away with a 6-2 victory and besides a forfeit, the lone winner was the surprising Gail Girasella.

"Gail played well at the A-10's and she's been a definite bright spot for us," said Husted.

The rest of the squad, including new number one player Maura Foley all lost in straight sets.

UMass next travels to Providence for a match on Friday.

question about that," Hewelt said. "She's a first-class individual."

Kristofik had 19.5 points and 11.9 rebounds per game at Morris Central School, while Ireland chipped in 21 points and 16 rebounds for Broad Ripple HS.

"Kim and Lisa are very versatile. They can play inside and out and are quality people," Hewelt said. "Both are able to fill a number of different needs."

Women's soccer coach Jim Rudy has signed forwards Kim Eynard of Endicott, NY and Robyn Holzman of Swampscott. Eynard holds the national record for career goals with 158, and was an All-New York state player. Holzman is a three-year Northeast Conference selection.

"They both have a lot of speed," Rudy said. "I like the looks of Kim, and Robyn is a lefty, which we don't have now."

Rugby team drops two games

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts rugby team traveled to Rhode Island last Saturday for the annual Providence Tournament, only to find two tough losses waiting for them.

The first game against Brown kicked off amid cold, raw and windy conditions. UMass scored on tri's by Mark Casey and Tony Piro. UMass also scored a conversion, but that was just not enough as Brown escaped with a 12-10 win.

In the second game against Central Connecticut the wind played havoc as gusts up to 35 miles per hour hindered the UMass effort. "The wind was a huge factor," UM's Jeff Burrill said.

Central Connecticut used the windy conditions to its advantage by kicking with the wind and keeping the ball in UMass territory. Casey had another tri, but again it wasn't enough as UMass lost. 15-6.

On the bright side of the weekend, Holy Cross made the mistake of playing the B and C teams and got stomped like a narc at a biker rally. The final score of that game was 38-6.

Next weekend the team will visit Tufts University in a game scheduled for a noon start.

Crew teams race against Trinity

By C.J ABATI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's crew teams packed up Saturday and traveled to Connecticut to race a powerful Trinity team. The race took place on Rainbow Reservoir, just over the Connecticut border, and again the teams had varied success.

The varsity women's team continued on its winning path. They have yet to lose this season, and are looking tougher as the year progresses. In this race the women outdistanced their opponents by two seconds in a victory that was a real morale booster for the team. Trinity is always fast, and won a silver medal at the Nationals last Fall.

The jayvee women were also victorious with a four-second victory, but the novice team came up short in its effort.

On the men's side there was only one winning boat — the lightweight eight. They blew Trinity out of the water with a very impressive eight-second victory, more than expected against a team that had beaten some fast boats in the past.

The heavyweight boat raced hard, but again came up on the short end of the stick, losing by about two seconds. The boat's only win on the year came against Amherst College.

In an interesting strategy, the jayvee team broke its eight-man boat into two four-man units. The plan backfired, however, as both boats lost. The novice men were also unable to pull off a victory.

This Saturday the Coast Guard Academy will travel to UMass for races set to begin at 10 a.m.

Women's lax falls again, 13-8

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Fifty minutes is not such a long time. But don't tell that to the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. To the Gazelles, it feels like an eternity.

For one half anyway, the Gazelles played like superwomen. But in the other they were manhandled by yet another national power. Right now it looks like it would have done the UMass some good to schedule a few patsies. The Gazelles need the confidence.

Unfortunately for Patti Bossio's crew, the Gazelles couldn't find the phone booth until the first half was over. Final score: Dartmouth College 13, UMass 8.

After what happened in the first period, even super human strength couldn't have brought the Gazelles back. The Big Green scored the first eight goals of the game while UMass was somewhere off in la la land.

Junior Sue Murphy finally got the Gazelles on the board but not until 21:54 of the first half. Senior co-captain Cathy Fuhrman followed with two minutes left in the half to make the score 8-2.

But after Holly Allen scored her third goal of the half, 25 seconds later for Dartmouth, this game was already turning into a laugher. Ha, ha, 9-2.

"They are better than us," Bossio said. "There's no question about it. Player for player, skill, they're better than us."

The Big Green (8-1) certainly proved that yesterday by winning their eighth game in a row. UMass, (1-8) lost its eighth game in its last eight tries.

The game was just about iced after the first half. However, the Gazelles still had a shred of hope left with forwards as dangerous as Murphy and Fuhrman.

They brought UMass back in the second half but could not do it all by themselves. Each ended up with four goals and their second half performance carried the Gazelles to actually outscore the Big Green, 6-4.

The first half problems that UMass experienced were not all matchup and skill problems. The Gazelles did not come to play yesterday and when you're playing the No. 7 team in the nation as UMass was yesterday, you have to be mentally prepared. UMass was not in the first half.

"There was just a spark there (in the second half) that just wasn't there in the first half," Murphy said.

Still though, the Gazelles could not solve Allen. The junior forward scored three more goals to up her total to six for the afternoon.

Bossio even tried shifted from the zone that UMass was playing in the first half to a man-to-man which was somewhat more effective.

"I preferred the first half to the second half," Dartmouth coach Josie Harper said. "That's why you can never take a UMass team for granted because they're such competitors."

Anne Moellering was another player that the young Gazelle defense (five freshman) could not stop. But that's not a bad sign. Nobody has been able to stop Moellering. After adding five goals and one assist to her totals yesterday, the senior forward has scored 46 goals and four assists.

She and Allen were a nightmare for UMass netminder Liz Keats who ended up with 16 saves.

Baseball team settles for another split

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Staff

It had been observed before yesterday's double-header against the University of Vermont that the University of Massachusetts baseball team had achieved the pinnacle of mediocrity.

The Minutemen were 13-13 overall, 5-5 on their southern trip, 8-8 up north and 4-4 in the Atlantic-10. Staying true to this form, UMass split a pair of games with UVM, winning the first 9-4 and dropping the second 9-6.

In the first game the two teams tried very hard to give away the match by totalling eight errors between them. The pitchers in the leadoff were Jerry Creamer (1-0, 6.55 ERA) for UMass and Chris Rousseau (0-4, 5.63) for the Catamounts.

The Minutemen started the scoring in the first, after Drew Seccafico (2-for-3 with 2 runs scored in the first game) doubled down the left field line and came around on Drew Comeau's single to center. Vermont answered quickly in the top of the second when Steve Taylor walked, stole second, took third Tom O'Hara's double and crossed the plate on a balk by Creamer.

The score remained 1-1 until the bottom of the fourth when Seccafico singled, went to second on Comeau's grounder to third, stole third and was batted in on a single by Brian Bright (1-for-2, 1 RBI and 1 run scored).

The Catamounts turned around and took their first and only lead of game one when Creamer hit the leadoff batter, Pat Bose, allowed him to steal second and then walked the next batter, Rob Diestel. The runners both advanced on catcher Derek Dana's error and Creamer was pulled in favor of Dan O'Leary (0-1, 9.35). O'Leary retired the first man he faced, looking at strikes but Bose scored on a fielder's choice and Diestel went home on Pat Culumovic's slow roller to third, putting UVM up 3-2.

The lead didn't last long though as Dana (1-for-2, 1 RBI and two runs scored) was issued a walk to start off the bottom half of the fifth and moved to second on a single by Kevin Correa (2-for-3, 1 RBI and two runs scored), took third on a sacrifice by Glen DiSarcina, Correa to second, and both he and Correa touched home on an error by the pitcher, giving UMass a 4-3 lead.

The Minutemen broke the game open in the sixth, starting with Steve Kern's one-out solo homer to right. Bright followed with a walk, taking second on a second-baseman's error which gave Mike Chambers first base. Dana came up and singled Bright home and Chambers to second. Chambers scored and Dana went to third on Correa's single and Dana came around on a catcher's error with

UM teams ink recruits

Good news came in droves yesterday as three University of Massachusetts teams received letters-of-intent from prospective athletes for next season.

The women's basketball team was the big winner, picking up three new signees, while the men's hoop and the women's soccer teams each got two.

The men's hoop team got a couple of badly needed big men, signing 6-foot-9 Kennard Robinson from the Bronx and 6-10 Gary Hughes of Naugatuck, Conn.

Robinson, while at Long Island Lutheran, averaged 14 points and nine rebounds per game last season, and was a first team All-New York state, second team All-Long Island and an honorable mention Street and Smith All-American. He was also recruited by Providence, Rutgers, North Carolina-Charlotte and West Virginia.

Hughes averaged 12 points and 12 rebounds for Milford Academy. The two join Tony Barbee of Indianapolis and Tom Pace of Denver, who signed during the Fall signing period.

"They're pretty good players. Collectively as a group they will help us," said UM coach John Calipari. "We're excited we got good kids who love to play basketball. They're the kind of kids we want to build the program around.

Women's basketball coach Kathy Hewelt filled several needs with her three signees. Nancy Foster, a 5-10 guard from Union Community College, along with a pair of 6-foot forwards — Kim Kristofik from Morris, NY and Lisa Ireland from Indianapolis, will help out the Minutewomen with their versatility.

Foster averaged 19.8 points and 8.7 rebounds for Union last season, as well as 7.8 assists and 4.7 steals. She is a first team Kodak All-America and a two-time New Jersey Player-of-the-Year.

"Nancy Foster is a blue-chip recruit, no

Men's lax entertains Dartmouth

JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Dick Garber says he really doesn't know much about today's opponent, Dartmouth College.

However, that may actually turn out to be beneficial for the Gorillas when they take to the Hill at 3 p.m. Not knowing what kind of talent the Big Green has, it won't be easy for the Gorillas to take their opposition lightly.

What is known is that Dartmouth comes in at 4-3, having just played nationally-ranked Penn to a tough game before falling, 12-8. The Green is 4-3 on the year and ranked fifth in New England.

UMass meanwhile has better numbers on paper. The Gorillas are 7-1 and ranked eighth nationally, as well as number one in New England. That there would tip the scales to the home side. But Garber isn't taking any chances.

"They've made signs of progress. They're well-organized and playing better," Garber said. "They don't have the depth to match us, but it should be a decent game."

Leading the attack for the Big Green is junior attack Chris Bates with 18 goals and 11 assists. Senior middie Pete Turk (8-10), sophomore attack Brett Morrison (11-4) and Chris Nicholas (8-7) and sophomore middie Todd Gibby (11-3) are all capable.

Dartmouth will be looking for only its third win in 21 tries against UMass.

Tennis teams upended

● Minutemen fall to Hartford, PC

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team played two incredible, tough matches, only to take two straight losses.

Monday, while thousands were running in the Boston Marathon, the Minutemen had a marathon of their own against the University of Hartford. The men took their first loss of the season, falling to the Hawks, 7-2.

"The team was closer to beating Hartford than the score reflects. Four of the singles went to three sets, unfortunately to Hartford's favor," said UMass coach Manny Roberts. "Every year it's a flip-flop in scores between Hartford and the guys. This year Hartford played just a little better."

The wins for the Minutemen were from third singles player Paul Audet, who took a three-setter 7-5, 4-6, 6-1, and the doubles team of Humberto Soto and Matt Murphy, which won 10-4 in a 10-game pro set.

The second tough meet was yesterday's match against Providence College. The match was over after the singles play, with Providence taking five out of the six games. The one win for UMass came again from Audet. After 2:40 and three sets, Audet nabbed the match with a 0-6, 6-4 7-6 (7-5) score.

Brian Gable, the number one singles player, played through a tough three-setter against Fernando Romero, a Providence recruit from Peru. Gable lost the first set, 2-6, but came back full force to win the second, 6-3. In the third though, after some great points Romero outplayed him and won the match.

Rich Stone, at fourth singles also played a long and grueling match to three sets. He lost the first, 1-6 and rallied to take the second, 7-5 before dropping the match.

● Women 7th in A-10s, lose to UConn

By BRAD HALFOND
Collegian Correspondent

For once, the problem for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team this weekend and yesterday wasn't the weather — it was the competition.

UMass was overwhelmed and outmatched at the Atlantic 10 championshps this weekend and yesterday things didn't change against the University of Connecticut.

The A-10's at Penn State first saw UMass get swept by a dominating West Virginia squad and then blanked by another powerful school, Geroge Washington University.

"I didn't realize there was so much talent there," said UMass coach Michael Husted.

Husted had hoped for his team to finish as high as fourth, but the Minutewomen instead settled for seventh. UMass rounded out the tournament with an 8-1 victory over a St. Bonaventure team it had already beaten this year, and a forfeit decision over St. Joseph's.

Six arrested in lab protest

Students demonstrate against military research

Six University of Massachusetts students last night were arrested for trespassing after they took over a campus laboratory to protest military-sponsored research at the University.

Two students were treated and released from Health Services for soreness after being dragged from Marcus Hall by campus police at 7:15 p.m. following the six-hour takeover. Arrested were UMass students Frank E. Bowrys III, Loyda Guzman, Laura J. Morrisette, Diane Ditmore, Andrew J. Sirulnik and Hampshire College student Randolph L. Viscio.

Some of the demonstrators screamed as they were physically removed from the building.

People for a Socially Responsible University, along with the Central American Student Association, organized the event on the "national day of action" called to protest US funding of the ongoing conflict in El Salvador, according to PSRU representative Joe Rubin.

"We think that Department of Defense research taking place on this campus is a serious issue that affects our futures and the productive research that is done at this university," said Rubin following the occupation.

Originally, about 20 students, some wearing tattered fatigues and gas masks and carrying plastic rifles, poured into the Microwave Remote Sensing laboratory in the building's basement around 1 p.m.

After about two hours of protest, UMass police arrived to the scene and gave protesters the option to leave on their own accord, or stay and face the possibility of further police action.

Nine people chose to remain in the laboratory, without food, water or the use of a bathroom. Jonathan Leavitt, 22, of Northampton, left the laboratory later in the afternoon to call the parents of the protesters and to inform the authorities of recent developments.

"The police condensed the laboratory to a small area. Some people went to the bathroom in a trash can," Leavitt said.

He said there were six or seven police officers in the laboratory watching the protesters.

Rubin was one of the protesters who chose to leave the laboratory. He remained in the basement of Marcus with five or six other people displaying support for the cause by banging on a door to the labratory chanting, "End the war, end the war."

Ricardo Townes, associate dean of students, entered the laboratory to read the eight remaining occupants the relevant parts of the Code of Student Conduct and warned them that any violation of the code may result in expulsion from the University.

The occupants remained in Marcus after the building officially closed at 5 p.m.

Arthur Hilson, executive director of public safety, met with Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson, Chancellor Joseph Duffey and several faculty members and five student representatives to decide the course of action. Hilson announced at 6:35 p.m. in front of the lab that the demonstrators would be arrested.

After Hilson informed the protesters of the imminent police action, one more left the room.

Hilson said Duffey and Madson were adamantly against

Students petition to ban Coke machines

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Correspondent

A petition drive to have Coca-Cola vending machines removed from the University of Massachusetts is underway, prompted by student opposition to the company's continued investment in South Africa.

Christine Robinson, a first year student who is organizing the drive, said she held an information table last week in the Student Union building to educate students about Coke's involvement in South Africa and has since collected 2,000 signatures supporting a machine ban.

"Don't drink Coke because if you do, you're drinking the blood of a dead South African," Robinson told a student who was putting money into a Coke machine on campus.

The Coca-Cola company produces several soft drinks including Sprite, Minute Maid and Canada Dry, as well as Very Fine juices.

South Africa's apartheid system legalizes segregation, allowing the country's 4 million Whites to politically and economically dominate 22 million Blacks.

"They don't treat [Blacks] as if they were human," she said.

The Coca-Cola company agreed in 1986 to divest in South Africa to encourage the end of apartheid, but actually only relocated its syrup plants to Swaziland, a country that is economically dependent on South Africa, Robinson said.

The company's 15 bottling plants were then sold to independent owners who now buy their syrup from the Swaziland-based plants, rendering the move useless because neither the government nor Coke sales were affected, she said.

By removing the machines from campus, Robinson said that UMass will be sending a strong message to both the Coca-Cola company and to the South African government.

Ashtok Kranjuli, director of Auxiliary services, said UMass receives 17 cents from every dollar acquired in Coke sales.

Robinson called this stipend "dirty money," adding that the University should "stop using dirty money to build our buildings."

Larry Lindahl, senior purchasing manager for Auxiliary Services, said the University's contract with the Coca-Cola company will expire on June 30.

"If someone gets enough names, it might make a difference," he said.

The massive response to the petition is helping to boost the drive for the removal

Hoffman's death mourned

WORCESTER, (AP) — About 1,000 people packed a synagogue yesterday to remember Abbie Hoffman as a gladly of historic reknown who stood up to bullies and handed out advice to basketball players and governments alike.

"Thank you, Abbie," basketball star Bill Walton told the congregation at Temple Emanuel. "Thank you for helping me and many, many like us."

Walton was among the hundreds who marched from Hoffman's childhood home in a drizzle to the synagogue the activist attended as a child.

Folksinger Pete Seeger led the way, singing, "Abbie's spirit is still alive," as the first line to the Gospel hymn "Down by the Riverside."

Walton recalled how he met Hoffman several years ago during a Celtics losing streak. He said immediately began giving advice, saying, "You know, Billy, you've got to do this with your game and you've got to do that."

Outside the temple, which seats 900, an overflow crowd of more than 100 listened to newspaper columnist Sydney Schanberg reminisce about his cousin's activist antics and indomitable spirit.

Hooters slated for Pond show

Stevie B. also lined up

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A myriad of musical talent — ranging from new wave rock to rap reggae — is scheduled to rock the campus pond during spring concerts next month, the Union Program Council announced at last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

The Pond concert is scheduled for May 7 from noon to 6 p.m. and will feature The Hooters, who have frequented the pop charts in recent years, Stevie B, who sings pop and dance music, Shinehead, a rap reggae group, and The Tom-Tom Club, made up of two members of The Talking Heads.

Student Sen. Bud Verge, business manager for UPC, said the council expects a large turnout for the event, which is free to UMass students with proper University identification.

"We're looking for a very successful show," Verge said. "It's a very diversified show — it will appeal to anybody."

Verge refused to give the amount of money each band will be paid for their performances, but said "we spent considerably less than we were looking to spend."

In other Student Government Association business last night:

There was debate circulating in the Senate over whether the SGA should advocate the removal of Cutback City, a mock shantytown erected more than two months ago to protest state budget cutbacks against public higher education.

Sen. W. Greg Rothman announced he is preparing a motion to ask City residents to remove the shacks and refocus their energies on lobbying and writing state legislators because the protest is losing its effect.

"It was a good protest at one time, but it has really outlasted its stay," Rothman said. "Right now it's just an eyesore."

The city has fallen prey to vandals twice this week, according to police reports, which said profanity was spray-painted on several of the shacks, including some derogatory remarks directed toward "liberals."

Police also reported yesterday that a sleeping bag belonging to the city was vandalized.

Mark Russ, a City resident, said in an interview earlier this week that the City has not lost its focus and has accumulated about 2,000 signatures on a petition to state representatives.

Senate Speaker John Dunlap, however, said 2,000 signatures in two-and-a-half months is not a great accomplishment, and encouraged residents to join forces and lobby with the SGA.

State may compensate for slavery

By JOSEPH L. HILL JR.
Collegian Staff

African-Americans could receive state reparations because of the sanctioning of slavery by the United States government, if a proposed bill in the Massachusetts state senate is enacted.

State Sen. Bill Owens, who sponsored the bill, spoke to more than 50 people at the Campus Center this week and said Black Americans deserve some form of compensation because they helped to build the United States.

"No other group of people have contributed as much to American shores as African-Americans, yet we are the only people who have not been paid," Owens said.

Owens asserted that he was "not a racist" for proposing the bill, and maintained that he typically represented people not represented by state government, regardless of race or sexual preference.

The issue of reparations is not a new one, Owens said, adding that the US government has a history of providing compensation to ethnic groups that it has committed crimes against.

"The case for reparations is a well documented one," he said, citing US government aid to Europe for reconstruction after World War I to a more recent bill, which provides monetary reparations to Japanese-Americans forcibly relocated to internment camps during World War II.

Owens said this legislation is not the first of its kind in Massachusetts, which was the first state to abolish slavery when, in 1783, the state Supreme Court ruled that the practice violated the state Constitution.

Thaddeus Stevens, an early 20th century legislator from Massachusetts, co-sponsored a bill after the Civil War to provide ex-slaves with forty acres of land, Owens said.

The bill was passed by Congress but was later vetoed by the president, thereby preventing its passage, he said.

Although the bill does not state specifically what form the proposed reparations will take, Owens said it is possible that special educational or health care provisions will be offered as compensation.

When asked if he thought the bill would succeed, Owens said he was optimistic for its enaction: "It may take a long time but it's going to win."

Graduate student Robert Bearce's new video will help foreign students familiarize themselves with resources at the Tower library.

Student makes video to teach library skills

Foreign students learn through 'mystery'

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Sherlock Holmes is perhaps best known for his incredible ability to solve mysteries, but Robert Bearce has transformed the old detective's talents into a means for teaching English as a second language.

Bearce, a 37-year-old non-traditional student, has recently completed a video in which descendants of characters from the books of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes series solve a murder mystery using the University of Massachusetts library.

The video is designed to teach foreign students how to use the library facilities and how to write a research paper, he said.

Bearce, who is a masters degree candidate in English as a second language, said he came up with the idea of mystery story because he "wanted to incorporate some way of making teaching entertaining."

Teaching students the skills needed to use the library could have been produced more easily in a lecture type of format, said Bearce, but he thinks his way is more entertaining and better at conveying the meaning of words.

"Through video you can actually see people interacting so you can make some guesses as to what the conversation is about. And this guessing part is very important to language acquisition," he said.

Bearce said the video will be used at the American Cultural Center in Taiwan, where he worked for a year teaching English, to help United States bound professors and students to better understand our system of research and paper writing.

"The Asian standard of teaching is basically lectures. To question the opinion of your professor just isn't polite," he said.

Many Asian students have no idea about plagiarism, or how to footnote, because they are not used to proposing and supporting their own conclusions in research papers, he said.

Bearce also suggests that when people see the language being acted out they are more tuned to what is going on and learn better from whatever they are viewing.

"This [video] could be used to teach foreign students about culture and language, slang and idioms," he said.

Bearce hopes this project will lead to other opportunities in video but he would like to work in film more than video, he said.

"With video you can practice and make all your mistakes and then go on to film," he said.

of Coke products, Robinson said.

"If [the administration] sees that the majority of students want this, then they'll feel that they have to make a change," she said.

To the common assertion that pulling out of South Africa will hurt the country's Black population more than it will affect the government, Robinson said, "It is better for a people as a whole to have a social and economic say in the government than for a few to benefit from the oppressive system."

"South Africa relies heavily on foreign investment," she said. "If Coke pulls out, it might get other companies to do the same and make their government think about change."

Motorcyclist hurt in accident

A car leaving Haigis Mall struck a motorcycle travelling east on Mass. Ave., police said. The operator of the motorcycle was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital by ambulance, police said. Operator of the striking vehicle was cited, police said. Total damages were estimated at $1,700, police said.

In other police reports:

- A homeless man was arrested by Holyoke Police yesterday on an outstanding University of Massachusetts Police warrant.
- A van backing out of the access area at Cance Residence Hall struck a car parked at the meters at Fearing Street, police said. The van left, apparently unaware of striking the car. Police said they will contact the driver of the van.
- A parking meter in lot 45, valued at about $320, was damaged beyond repair, police said.
- A wallet, found by a janitor, contained several packets of what is believed to be a class B substance, police said. A complaint is expected to be sought against the owner.

providing food to the protesters, but Hilson took it upon himself to bring the protesters two one-gallon bottles of water.

Finally, at 7 p.m., the removal began. Most of the protesters surrendered peacefully, but two resisted.

The uprising began when the protestors, drawn from the five college and local community, marched from Whitmore around noon yesterday, pausing on the steps of Memorial Hall to write the names of students killed or declared missing in El Salvador's recent unrest, to the Student Union, where the protesters staged "guerilla theater."

About 150 students lounging in the sun watched as a demonstrator dressed to represent the military distributed "more money than you could ever need" to mock representatives of the computer science, biology and engineering departments, as fellow protestors passed out free "Anthrax vaccine" pills.

The march continued past the graduate towers reaching its ultimate destination, Marcus Hall.

Protesters disrupted class in the laboratory when they began the occupation.

"Though the research going on here (the occupied lab) is particularly insidious, the point is not to protest this lab specifically, but all military research labs on campus," Rubin said.

According to graduate students based in the occupied lab however, their home base was an unfair target for the protest. "My project measures humidity in the atmosphere, to predict the weather," explained student Philip Langlois. "The military uses weather forecasts, but so do boaters and people going on picnics."

All of the work done in the lab is "basic research," with the results available to the public, agreed graduate student Jim Mead. "Our research is out there for all to use."

Fellow poets . . . that's Pinsky with a Y

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Staff

Something went wrong at the UMass Poetry Society organized event featuring the poet Robert Pinsky on Tuesday night at Memorial Hall. Somebody forgot to turn on the microphone and hence no tape exists of the evening's poetry readings, which is a great shame because other than that everything went beautifully.

Before the reading started Mr. Pinsky spoke with me about poetry and poetic influences. He cited Ben Johnson, William Carlos Williams, Yeats and Ezra Pound's "An A.B.C. of Reading" as early influences. He was also enthusiastic about Allen Ginsberg "because he's Jewish, he's working class and he's from New Jersey like Williams and me."

He said also that to make it as a poet one has to "want it badly enough," and for the right reasons, those being, primarily, the desire to express something artistic . . . even as a child . . . to act, to play music." He did, in fact, "play saxophone when I was younger, but when I realized I couldn't achieve technical excellence with music, my dreams turned into poetry . . . in my youth I was a bit directionless."

Pinsky said he used to cure himself from the rejection letter blues by "realizing I wasn't the only one getting them . . . that some people who didn't want to make it badly enough would quit, and that I wasn't going to be one of those people. Otherwise it'd be too easy."

He also admitted to being a bit of a "poser" in his college days and picked up on the word "Bohemian," with a humorous candor that pricked the silly earnestness of yours truly.

Writers worthy of a glance today include post-modernists such as C.K. Williams and Frank Bidart, both of whom "use language in an almost documentary style." Pinsky also mentioned Charles Berstein and the "rather precious" Michael Palmer as well as Anne Winter. He did not seem as enthusiastic about these writers as he did on his earlier mentioned influences, but he also expressed dissatisfaction with my attempts at labelling writers/poets into groups. "It's just not that simple," he said later that night. "Poets are poets in their own right."

> . . . this art of ours doesn't make money, it's a personal art, but a social one because it uses everyday words.
> –Robert Pinsky

Pinsky proved this at the reading that evening. John Hunt, a professor of English at UMass applauded what Linda Woods has achieved with this event (what she's done is a minor miracle) and with the publication of Troy Magazine. He then introduced four poets who are also students. The first, John Purin, read a number of poems

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Campus bulimia cases triple

Nutritionist says awareness leads students to seek help

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

Women suffering from an eating disorder need not feel alone.

An estimated 11 to 20 percent of college-age women are victims of some type of eating disorder, according to Arlene Thomson, a nutritionist at University Health Services.

"It's the American way," Thomson said. "When you're American and you're a woman, you're obsessed with weight and body image."

Cases of bulimia, one type of eating disorder, have more than tripled at UHS in the past four years, according to UHS statistics.

But this increase may be a positive reflection on the number of students who recognize that they have a problem and are seeking help, Thomson said.

Although men also are victims of eating disorders, Thomson said, 95 percent are women. Societal pressures on women to look like thin fashion models help explain this trend, she said.

Persons who have bulimia, which is also called "the binge-purge syndrome," become psychologically addicted to a cycle of binging on mass amounts of food and then vomiting or abusing laxatives to rid oneself of the food.

Often started as a way to lose a few pounds, the behavior becomes obsessive and disrupts normal living, Thomson said. Those with the disorder usually try to hide their behavior because they feel guilty and embarrassed, she added.

Physically, the behavior can lead to serious and even life-threatening conditions. Tooth decay caused by exposure to stomach acids during vomiting, dehydration, and potassium imbalance leading to heart malfunctions are some consequences.

In a film entitled "Fear of Fat," bulimia is described as a way of stuffing down and throwing up not food, but emotions.

"It is ideal to be in therapy and be seeing a nutritionist because food is only the symptom," Thomson said. "A lot more goes on beneath that emotionally and psychologically."

Services on campus provide information and counseling for bulimia and other eating disorders free of charge or on a sliding scale fee.

A group formed by a UMass student, focuses on self-help. The informal, confidential discussion group is held at 7 p.m. on Mondays in Campus Center Room 902.

UHS nutritionists lead an informational drop-in session from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesdays in UHS Room 304, and welcome students to make individual appointments for nutritional counseling.

The Everywoman's Center Counseling Program is scheduled to begin counseling for persons with eating disorders in May.

Psychologists at the Counseling and Academic Center in Berkshire House provide counseling and welcome students between 1 and 4:30 p.m. for an interview to assess that person's needs.

"People need to realize that we don't need to waste so much time talking about food and the size of our thighs," Thomson said. "We don't have to choose this very narrow perspective on life."

Professor says her taking risks led to her success

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Prof. Bonnie Strickland

A symbol of hope resides in the long, narrow halls of Tobin Hall.

Psychology Professor Bonnie Strickland, 52, gazes upon the northwest portion of campus from her sixth-floor office, in which awards and pictures of her and Ted Kennedy and Silvio Conte plaster one office wall.

The opposite wall, an over-stuffed bookshelf, shows she did not become president of the American Psychology Association in 1987 without work.

In 1973 she came to the University of Massachusetts to be a psychology professor, and in 1976 she served as the department's chairwoman, lasting five years. She says her research studies are commonly cited in psychology, a field increasing in importance.

"As people tend to use psychology, it becomes more credible," she says.

Strickland, who says she believes women are under-valued in our society, helped to establish the Section of the Clinical Psychology of Women, of which she became the second female president.

In a recent report by Strickland, she says women are receiving half the doctoral degrees in psychology. She says, "If current trends continue, we will be the first among the major sciences to have a majority of women."

> "I think to be creative and successful, one has to be willing to take risks."
> — Bonnie Strickland

Although she says this projection is hopeful, she says it does not put to rest women's struggle in psychology because in the past when women have moved into a man's profession, the profession has become devalued.

Society's behavior is entrenched in "We've always done it this way," she says, grabbing a sign from her desk piles that has these words crossed out and noting this attitude blocks the progress of women.

"Women's work is just devalued. I think women just have to struggle a little more to be successful and be recognized," she says.

Society's recognition of women's value has progressed as evidenced in the growing number of books that do not use sexist language, she says. Also women are not expected to grow up and have kids, says Strickland who has never married.

"If anything the expectations are too great for women. But that's a very different dilemma than just having one option open," she says.

Keeping her options open is how Strickland has achieved her success, she says. Her achievements are not a fulfillment of a childhood dreams but rather a reward of her willingness to take risks and work hard, she says.

"Who would have dreamed it? I still don't believe it," Strickland says. "I think to be creative and successful one has to be willing to take risks."

A high school teacher prodded Strickland to attend Alabama State College for Women, where Strickland graduated with a degree in physical education and was nationally ranked as 16th in tennis, she says.

Her liaison with psychology occurred while playing tennis with a psychology professor, Dr. Herbert Eber, and a psychology majoring friend, she says. These two used Strickland as subject for their experiments, which led Strickland to doing research for the professor, she says.

Even though her undergraduate years lacked physical science, mathematics and statistics courses, she had displayed enough interest in psychology work to have Eber urge her to apply to graduate school, she says. "It was sort of a risk to go to graduate school. Nobody else left home," she says.

After Eber helped her arrange the finances, she entered Ohio State University, she says.

"Let other people help you. Don't be afraid to ask," she says.

With many classmates from distinguished universities such as Harvard at Ohio State she realized she didn't "speak the language" of the former undergraduate psychology majors, she says.

"Uh oh, Strickland. You are way over your head," she recalls, noting names such as B.F. Skinner and Carl Rogers sounded only vaguely familiar to her.

Strickland has come a long way from her graduate years, and she credits those who have helped her. Now as a professor, she says, she tries to be the giver of hope.

Porn censorship debated

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

This is the first article in a two part series on pornography.

While Andrea Dworkin, a nationally-known feminist, has called for the illegalization of pornography, most local anti-pornography activists say they are against censorship.

Dworkin spoke Sunday night at Smith College.

Gail Keilsen, a spokeswoman for one of the recent pickets of the Amherst Newsroom, said censorship is not relevant to the issue of pornography. "I really want people to stop buying [pornographic literature]."

She said her group aims to draw attention to stores that carry pornography, to encourage people to boycott these stores, and to heighten awareness about the effects of pornography on individuals and society.

In effect, Keilsen has asked the public to decrease their demand for pornography so that the stores will decrease their supply. She says she does not want to prevent publishers to stop distributing pornography, but wants to convince people to stop buying it.

A flier distributed by the Coalition of Nonoppressive Sexuality states, "Protesting pornography is not an act of censorship but an exercise of First Amendment rights."

Dr. Roger Libby, a sociologist and sexologist disagrees, saying that the local groups are trying to censor what types of literature are sold.

"They claim to be against censorship, but when you go out and boycott stores, what else do you call it?" Libby said.

He said trying to limit the sale of pornographic material is a violation of the First Amendment.

Libby attributes society's conflict with pornography to the negative view of sex that he says our society holds. "We are a sexually repressed society, we censor sex more than we censor violence," he said.

> "Protesting pornography is not an act of censorship but an exercise of First Amendment rights."

As the argument continues, national anti-pornography activists and organizations have formed task forces to analyze the psychological effects of viewing pornography, according to a spokeswoman for Concerned Women for America, a national organization that focuses on issues important to women.

The studies have shown that pornography encourages violence against women, she said.

San Francisco Women Against Violence in Pornography in 1985 viewed 26 pornographic films over a three-month period in 1985 and found: 21 rape scenes, 16 scenes with bondage and torture, two films of child molestation, and two films featuring the killing of women for sexual stimulation.

But Libby said, 'Studies have shown no connection between pornography and violence."

"As a society, we've lost our sense of humor," he said. "It is very important to have one in order to view any issue objectively.

including "poem for a femme fatale" about the late great Nico: "her reflection is not survival."

Christine Joyce was next and she recited her "Snapshots of Belchertown," allowing the words to overcome her nerves. Then came Connolly Ryan who later said "I try to shake people up a bit." He succeeded with poems such as "Blood, Drool and Semen" ("not to be confused with the band of a similar name"). The final student poet was Damian Roskill who read "No We're Not Hungry, We're American."

These were good poets, expressing themselves strongly to a gathering of about seventy people, and were a fine "response to the lack of adequate representation of undergraduate student creativity," (from the forward of Troy Magazine).

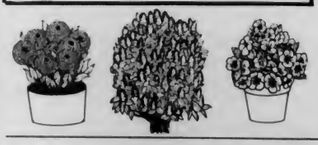
Pinsky was then introduced as "a walking testimony that there is a constituency for poetry in America." He spoke: "I'm happy and impressed by Linda and Chris, this art of ours doesn't make money, it's a personal art but a social one because it uses everyday words." He said Judaism is "the most boring religion in the world . . . and it's inevitable that we will have blasphemy as long as we have the sacred 'Thank God.' "

As for his poetry reading: he read, among others, "Window," which he "just finished this morning" and "The Want Bone" which will probably be the title of his newest poetry book. In a letter to the Distinguished Visitors Program thanking them for funding this event, Linda woods wrote, "The result of (Pinsky's) sincerity is an evening with a poet who makes you feel as if he candidly and trustfully whispered his heartfelt sorrows and joys into your ear." In the words of Oscar Wilde, "I wish I'd said that."

Hugh Kenner has said "Pinsky has found the idiom," and he has. It just has to be experienced.

Damian Roskill wrote "I banish you for you make our greatest seem petty."

Poetry is due for a tidal wave of resurgence very soon, if this evening was a taste of things to come. And soon we will all know that the glaring lights of MTV et. al. are nought but the Siberia for those of little faith, of little soul.



Milestone production for N W Theater

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Correspondent

The New World Theater has in the past brought us excellent plays from many diverse cultures, including the Hispanic culture. However, never before has this group put together its own production of a Spanish Language Play. That time has finally arrived. With the combined efforts of the New World Theater group, the Latin American Theater Project and the play's director, UMass professor Jaime Martinez-Tolentino, Encrucijada will be performed for the masses of the five-college area.

Encrucijada is a comedic play dealing with the social and political concerns of the Puerto Rican community of the 1950's. The island, a former colony of Spain was freed from its oppressive bonds by the United States in the Spanish-American war of 1898. The people were promised their freedom, however, the United States reneged on its promise and today Puerto Rico remains in the possession of the United States. While some feel grateful that America saved the island from the crushing clutches of Spain, others feel resentment that they have yet to receive their freedom.

In the 40's and 50's, the once farming nation was introduced to the technology and industry of the 20th century. While the intellecutual and social elite were able to adapt to these sudden changes, the unskilled laborers, employed on farms that were closing to make way for industry, had nowhere to go. Searching for new opportunities, these people migrated to America. Encrucijada centers on one such family.

In the ghetto of Spanish Harlem, Don Alfonso, his wife Dona Patricia, and their children Felipe, Mario and Marta, struggle to make ends meet. Alfonso is a former school teacher who helped the American troops in the Spanish-American war, and prefers the American occupation. He likes America, a view that is shared by the rest of his family except for Mario, a pro-independence revolutionary who hates almost everything about the US.

In Spanish "encrucijada" means "crossroads." This family faces the crossroads of the old ways and traditions of their Puerto-Rican heritage and the new way of life in America. Their decisions on which road to stay on, their beliefs and convictions, their struggles to make their own way, in the end tear them apart.

Encrucijada was written in 1958 by the much respected Puerto Rican author, Manuel Mendez Ballester. Ballester has written a novel, several short stories and numerous articles for Puerto Rican newspapers such as El Nuevo Dia, but he received most of his recognition through his plays.

The New World Theater group, according to Professor Martinez-Tolentino, hopes to paint a realistic portrait of the Puerto Rican experience in the New York ghettoes of the 1950's.

This play has caught the attention of the Hispanic communities of surrounding areas, especially in Holyoke, and hopefully there will be a large turnout from these communities. All concerned with this production are very excited, especially since it will be filmed and televised by WGBY-TV Channel 57 Springfield.

The play opens tonight at the Hampden Theater, beginning at 8 p.m. Admission price is $3 for students and senior citizens and $5 for the general public. The show will run from April 20 to April 22 and April 27 to April 29.

Student sculptors display themselves at Wheeler exhibit

By MARION RILEY
Collegian Correspondent

"We" is a collective pronoun, "myself" a singular pronoun and "us", again a plural pronoun. We Myself and Us, Wheeler Gallery's first spring exhibition, i?s in the new show evoke a self-questioning atmosphere and explores the inner feelings of artist's Brian Tanner and Tori Arpad inviting the observer into their mind and life. "A lot of them deal with me, emotions that I've had because of certain things," explained Tanner. The initial stages of the art work began as ideas, "when I'm caught in my own thoughts and feelings when nobody else is there," said Arpad.

Gallery

One of his own favorites is "In memory of the one I never met," a sculpture of a tombstone. On the top there is the head of an angel with wings. A look of question is seen on the face.

Tanner catches the passerby with simple yet significant titles and the distorted, wry figures. His work is a clear image of himself, "twisted yet balanced." He pulls many of his ideas from his journal writings, thoughts that at one time were private; "I take my emotions and pull them out and put them into three dimensions."

Other works depict unsymmetrical male figures, faces twisted into expressions of intense emotion.

Where Tanner is obsessed with contorted bodies, Arpad concerns hferself more with the colors of her sculptures. These are an indication of Arpad's emotions. "They are spontaneous kinds of things, how I feel about it and how I want others to feel about it."

One of her sculptures is entitled, "Rhapsody of Aurora Borealis." A female and male are intertwined as if dancing. One hand is wrapped aroundeach other's waist and the other hands are clasped together, pointing upward. The bottom third of the figure is purple which blends into green in the middle and then merges into yellow at the top.

Another fantastic sculpture is, "Birth of Autonomy: She finds Herself." This in itself is an amazing creation. There is a man kneeling on one knee. Arpad chooses to use the colors purple, yellow and turquoise and then implant striking blue eyes. Across his shoulders the man is carrying a lifeless woman of lavender and light blue. Emerging from her side is an angel, yellow and white with glittering blue eyes.

The exhibit is thought provoking. Seeing someone's inner thoughts in three dimensions makes one wonder what dwells within their own conscious and subconscious.

Public higher education: a key element

Editor's note: the following is testimony delivered by Michael Greiner to the Platform Committee of the Massachusetts Democratic Party of April 4.

Public higher education is a key element in the search for a society that is fair and prosperous. The Democratic Party has long believed that the goal of equality of opportunity is best served by a system of public education, and Massachusetts has been a shining example of the benefits of an educated citizenry. In this current time of budgetary stress, we must not lose sight of the benefits that public higher education has brought to each of us.

Greiner/Nakajima

New England is the foundry of American democratic practice — the town meeting bespeaks the value of participation — and education makes that citizen involvement possible. It is important to remember that most of the students in the public system of colleges and universities stay in the commonwealth — over 70 percent of the graduates from the University of Massachusetts system contribute to our towns and communities.

For many families in the commonwealth, public higher education is their only available option. It is important to criticize federal financial aid policies where they have reduced access to higher education, but we must face the awful consequences of increased rates of tuition and fees. 60 percent of the students of the University of Massachusetts at Boston are the first generation in their families to receive a college degree, and 70 percent of their students don't rely on parents or family for support. These and other students in the commonwealth can't be expected to carry the burden of a government in financial turmoil The poor and less well-off in our cities and towns must not be locked out of the benefits of our region's economic growth.

The blessings of public higher education don't accrue only to the disadvantaged. We often overlook the contribution that public higher education makes to the economic health of our society. Reports show that "42 percent of the economic growth in the United States since 1929 can be attributed to the education of the work force and advances in knowledge." No state better exemplifies this contribution than Massachusetts.

Public universities and colleges provide a multitude of benefits. High technology grants and research bring needed money and knowledge into the commonwealth — and universities concentrate an unusually high number of trained individuals near the growing industries. Reports have calculated the additional monies generated by the University of Massachusetts system as between 151 and 324 million dollars.

While return of investment alone is not a compelling reason to invest public money into higher education, it must be understood that investments in public colleges and universities are, in a deeper sense, a commitment to the values of our community. Polls show that 63 percent of Massachusetts citizens find public higher education to be essential to the economic health of the commonwealth, while 59 percent are sure that young people will have a more difficult time going to college in the future.

It is our belief that the people of Massachusetts will support increases taxes, if tied directly to support for public education and other programs. Other states have invested nearly twice the amount of state money into public higher education that Massachusetts has during 1987 and 1988.

In American of the late 20th century, post-secondary education has become an essential entry point into the middle class. Education and research is also a key element in the economic growth of our region and country. Massachusetts has always been a leader in the effort for a just society, and recently it has let the nation in high technology. The Massachusetts Democratic Party can demonstrate its continuing commitment for a just and prosperous society through its support for public higher education.

Reacting to reactionaries

I'm not sure if my parents could handle the politics here. I'm not afraid that the radical liberals will shock them. They grew up in the sixties. Even though they are Republican, they are used to liberals.

It's the campus reactionaries that worry me.

I can just picture it: My dad and my mom turn wonderful shades of red as they listen to the views of the Republican Club, or read about them in the "Cheers and Jeers" section of the Minuteman. Anti-Alcohol policy. Pro-snowball fight, and anti-Christmas carolling. Anti-communist (okay, so the folks will agree with that). Anti-campus pornography sales a few months ago, yet pro-pornography sales when Allison Decker came to town.

Pamela McCarthy

To all of you members of the Republican Club who call yourselves true Republicans: Can it. I grew up in a Republican family. My neighborhood is Republican. I live with real Republicans in my dorm. I am friends with real Republicans. You people aren't real Republicans.

I thought Republicans liked civilized behavior. I thought that Republicans liked to be consistent.

Republicans aren't supposed to approve of lawbreaking and rowdiness. If there was a snowball fight in my hometown that ruined property and landed one poor student in the hospital, most of the conservative residents would be screeching for the cops to haul the butts of the idiots who participated in jail, not encourage it in a newspaper.

I was always under the impression that pornography was considered immoral by Republicans. The Republican Club also held this position, until the Playboy bunny Alison Decker came amidst the feminist-backed anti-porn protests. Suddenly, they became the advocates of the First Amendment, and show their approval of Playboy in "Cheers and Jeers". "You can't do that! To ban magazines is immoral and impedes on our freedom of speech!" Yet a few months before, they said in the same section of the Minuteman that it was ironic the University Store couldn't sell cigarrettes, but could still sell pornography. Pornography, they asserted, was immoral, and should not be sold.

My parents and my Republican friends would never smear someone in a publication. They would never hang up misleading posters. They would never approve of going to a meeting just to pick a fight — especially if the meeting was held by a radical-Communist group. In fact, I'm willing to bet money that most of them wouldn't go to the meeting period, simply because they know they couldn't hold their tempers for that long. Assault charges weigh very heavily on the consciences of most Republicans.

Then these guys have to bash on the alcohol policy. While I, too have my problems with it, I think it rather ironic that they'd prove how worthy we are of respect from the administration by acting like a pack of hyperactive two-year-olds. Sure, that's how you get respect. I was always told by my very Republican family and neighbors you had to earn respect. It's not something you get from throwing a temper tantrum. Please, please, don't claim to represent me in this battle. It makes me look bad.

There are decent Republicans in this world. Yeah, they're conservative, and they won't apologize for that. Some are more vocal than others. Some are more conservative than others. They have beliefs, and we have to accept the fact that they hold them. Many non-members are pretty embarrassed about the conduct of the mutants who dare to call themselves true Republicans.

I'm definitely not conservative. I'm certainly not a Republican. But I have grown up with them. I know them. The members of the Republican Club aren't Republicans, they are just a bunch of obnoxious brats.

Historic plight

I am an Armenian and I'm sick and tired. How many of you reading this know about the Armenian Genocide committed by the Ottoman Turks in 1915? Sure, some of you may have heard about it, but a majority don't know anything about it. I don't mean to blame you. The fault doesn't lie with the people who know nothing about the first genocide of this century. The blame is on the shoulders of this country and others who deny the historical documents exposing the planned extermination of the Armenians simply to keep their ties with the government of Turkey in good position.

Nearly two million Armenians were viciously and brutally slaughtered in 1915. The Ottoman Turks felt that Armenians were getting in the way of their political master plan to create a homogenous Turkish empire. The realization of this plan meant the total liquidation of all Armenians since the Ottoman empire occupied a large portion of historical Armenia.

Men, women, and children were herded like cattle and killed by the indifferent hands of Turkish soldiers. The Armenian nation crumbled and the remaining fragments dispersed to the four corners of this earth only to reassemble in a unified determination to remind the Turkish government that we are alive with the tears of our grandmothers in our hearts and the strength of our grandfathers in our fists.

And now I write this hoping that someone's eyes have opened and someone's conceince is shaken.

I am a part of the Armenian people. Since our beginnings, we have been massacred and oppressed by those around us. We have been driven to the point where we can no longer passively resist those who try to erase our history. We refuse to be robbed of our identity and denied justice for the genocide of our ancestors.

The time has come for this world to lift its veil and clean the blood stains of 1915.

Unable to observe holiday

The other day, I was waiting in line to get a ticket for the Passover Seder. Before long, I discovered that this would be impossible because the Seder was "sold out." I found it difficult to accept this. This was not something I had just decided to attend because I felt like it. This is part of my religion. I was denied something I grew up with.

I later learned the nature of this problem. It seems that there are only about 204 places for people at the Seder and first preference is given to people on the kosher meal plan. There are approximately 191 people on this meal plan. There are 4000 Jewish people on this campus. Only 13 people who aren't on the kosher meal plan are able to attend the service. Somehow, this doesn't seem right.

This wasn't the first experience I have had with the university's unfeeling attitude toward the Jewish religion. This past year I was unable to be at home during Chanukah, an important holiday for family, because it was during finals week. It's also extremely difficult to go home for most religious holidays because they usually fall during the week.

As far as this Passover goes, I suppose I'll just have to do without or find someone to observe it with. One solution to this problem would be to pen another DC for the Seder. It just doesn't seem right that the university's feeling toward us is either go home or tough it out.

Raspberry award winners

Raspberry (raz-ber-ee) n. (pl. -ries) 1: An edible sweet red conical berry. 2. The bramble that bears it. 3. A vulgar sound or expression of disapproval or rejection.

The raspberry (definition –1) has always been one of my favorite fruits to adorn my Kellogg's with at breakfast. Save the banana, it is the best fruit to blend with your morning cereal. It turns the milk pink. I admit that I have no use for the second definition of raspberry offered in the Oxford American Dictionary, but the third and final definition is a very useful one indeed! I believe it originated in either the Bronx or perhaps somewhere in Clinton, Massachusetts. I'm sure you'll recognize the sound. . . phhhtt! You know, it has occurred to me that there are some people out there who are fully deserving of a few well-placed raspberries. In fact, I bet there are some people and organization out there just begging for a good phhhtt!

First of all, to whoever pulled the false fire alarm on the 10th floor of John Adams at four in the morning on Saturday, April 1. . .phhhtt!

Hey North Amherst Towing Company . . . phhhtt! . . . phhhtt! You guys get two because you towed me twice.

To anyone who slows down as if they were going to pick me up while I was hitchhiking, then speeds away while I run to catch up . . . phhhhhttt!! (Of course, if my car wasn't towed, I wouldn't be hitchhiking anyway!)

To everyone that came back from spring break looking like Al Jolson . . . phhhtt!

To any slob who can't take a second to pick up their tray at the DC, leaving a childish mess for others to deal with . . . phhhttt!

To those groups of mental midgets who decided UMass was in desperate need of budget cuts; we weren't and never have been in need of budget cuts, so . . . phhhtt!

To any professor who denied a student a point on their average in order to pass the class or graduate . . . phhhhtttt!!

To anyone who forces us to inhale their cigarette smoke in a designated NO SMOKING area (especially an elevator) . . . phhhtt!

When I was four years old, I began to count down the years before I would be allowed to drink at an outdoor concert. Now at the advanced age of 22 I won't for the second year in a row, be permitted to drink a six pack at the Southwest Concert. Here's to the system . . . phhhtt!

To the new AT&T long distance, $75 dialing limit . . . phhhtt!

To whoever took my wet laundry out of the drier minutes after I started the machine, dried their own clothes and put my still wet laundry in back in the drier as if I wouldn't notice anything . . . phhhtt!

I don't believe for a second that all these raspberries are going to do much to change an imperfect world. but this article has make me feel a whole lot better. I'm sure it makes you feel better too. If it doesn't . . . phhhhhttttt!!

Fire and First Aid Unit always there

The UMass Fire and First Aid Unit is a division of the Emergency Medical Technicians and First Responders which is sponsored by the Division of Environmental Health and Safety. This Unit is comprised of students who are trained in fire extinguisher usage. They are employed at large events such as in the Fine Arts Center, Student Union Ballroom and Bowker Auditorium.

In addition to those events, this unit is present at football games and the Spring Concerts. The role they play is to provide initial emergency care while the Amherst Fire Department responds with an ambulance to take over care.

Fire prevention is another key role of the unit's members, ensuring that fire exits are adequately maintained and marked.

We at the Environmental Health and Safety thought the University community should be aware of this unit and its function.

Nationalism is not racism

"Zionism is a political movement organically related to world imperialism and hostile to all movements of liberation and progress in the world. It is a racist and fanatical movement in its formation; aggressive, expansionist and colonialist in its aims; and fascist and Nazi in its means. Israel is the tool of the Zionist movement and a human and geographical base for world imperialism..."

— Article 22 of the Palestine National Covenant."

Jewish monsters, using Israel as its power base, will take over the earth and establish a Nazi-Racist Empire. Reinstating both the Nuremburg and Jim Crow laws is the Zionist Dream. That is the message being perpetuated in the United Nations and on this campus.

Tuesday, in front of the Student Union, there was a rally "to end all aid to Apartheid Israel." One of the three members of "Jews Against Zionism," cried that "Israel must end the most brutal occupation of the 20th century."

It would be stretching it to suggest that the West Bank and Gaza is suffering the most brutal occupation of April, 1989. Because TV camera people aren't allowed to carouse around most other war zones, we see only violence in nations granting access to the press. As Jerusalem mayor Teddy Kollek put it, "Because Israel allows access and Iraq does not, a stone thrown in Jerusalem will get more coverage than 5000 Kurds killed in Iraq." We cannot condemn what we cannot see.

Simply put, Zionism is nationalism: the right for a Jewish state in Israel to exist. It is the belief that Jews must have control over their own destiny. Israel stands for the survival of Jewish lives, tradition and culture. Therefore, "Jews Against Zionism" makes as much sense as "Blacks for Apartheid."

There are, however, some Zionists who are racists. Meir Kahane, a politician who ran a "deport all Arabs" campaign, was banned for life from the Israeli Kenesset. But to equate all Zionists with racists is as fair as equating all Arabs with terrorists. Extremism exists on the fringes of all societies.

Israel is involved in a political struggle, not a racial one. No Palestinian rioters have died because of the color of their skin (60% of Jewish Israelis are of Arab descent). The curfews, the identification cards, etc. forced on the Palestinians are military actions. West Bank and Gaza are not part of Israel. They have been "occupied territories" since the 1967 war.

It has been 22 years. Why is stubborn Israel still hanging on? Because giving up the West Bank would reduce central Israel to a nine mile wide strip. Residing in that narrow region is 75% of the Israeli population. Picture hostile troops in Northampton.

For a moment try to forget your sympathies in the current conflict and focus on the major point of Arab-Israeli debate for the past 41 years:

Israel's right to exist.

After 20 plus years of vowing to liquidate Israel, Arafat tells the United Nations that the "PLO was just kidding" and the world wonders why Israel may be a little skeptical. Why can't the Jewish state be nice for a change?

The reason for refusal must be that the Israelis are racists. Israeli 18 year-olds can't wait to graduate high school and go on vacation to the West Bank where they can beat up some Arab babies. Such a scenario is common in Israel, the South Africa of the Middle East.

The possible propaganda evolving from such an argument would make historians cringe. I can see the new pamphlets now: Yasser Arafat's picture superimposed over Martin Luther King's.

Both, as you know, advocated non-violent mass protest to overcome the evils of prejudice and racism.

Column misrepresents activists

I am writing to correct some misinformation that Lisa Hamelin presented in her column ("Animal rights go too far," April 13).

As far as animal research is concerned, it should be noted that it is not just animal rights activists that are opposed to this practice, but also a growing number of scientists. They object on the basis of two basic fact: 1) diseases in animal laboratories must be artificially and violently induced in the test subjects, and 2) animal systems don't approximate the human system.

Violently and artificially induced diseases don't behave as naturally induced diseases do, and in fact, most of the existing data on diseases has been developed through the study of human case studies.

Concerning human and animal anatomies, even preliminary research will show numerous examples of drugs and treatments that performed adequately on non-human subjects but caused disastrous effects when applied to human beings. for instance, the pregnancy drug Thalidomide was safely tested on mice, but caused birth defects and underdeveloped limbs on human subjects. Clioquinol, purported to cure diarrhea, often caused diarrhea (in addition to roughly 30,000 cases of blindness and/or paralysis and thousands of deaths).

Concerning AIDS research, animal research has not provided any conclusive data, whereas epidemiological examination of trends in the incidence of AIDS and the consistent isolation of the virus from human patients yielded much information. Mathematical and computer models, statistical analysis, human case studies, tissue cultures, bacteria cultures, radioimmunoassay, quantum pharmacology, and in vitro testing have consistently lead to better and more accurate results than animal testing.

I bear no animosity to Hamelin, as she is a product of our society. All I ask is that individuals learn the facts concerning an issue so they can make an educated decision. If one examines the issue of animal experimentation, reason will undeniably lead to the conclusion that this practice is essentially untenable.

The Road to Riches has an "iron clad" guarantee

I have the secret. I sent my $12.95 to John Wright Publishing and he sent me his guaranteed money-making secret, documented in The Royal Road To Riches.

Are you ready? The way to gain everything you want in life (wealth, success, peace of mind) is to sell information by mail — just like John Wright has been doing, at least since the publication of his book in 1981.

First off, let me say that John Wright Publishing is a legitimate business based in Santa Monica, California. He didn't take my money and run. For my $12.95 I was sent a 123-page book that was, for the most part, filled with double-spaced print.

The Royal Road To Riches outlines the basics of how to start your own mail-order business. It includes information on marketing techniques, writing ads, and the legal aspects of the business which I'm sure would be valuable to anyone who is really interested and motivated to make money by selling people literature through the mail.

Mr. Wright suggests we research and write a small "how-to" booklet, such as "How to Lose All the Weight You Want in 10 Days," or "How to Plant Geraniums that Never Die," or, of course, "How to Make Up to One Million Dollars in 9 Months." This will be the product that we'll be able to sell through the mail to an information-starved population.

But, even better, Mr. Wright suggests that, instead of spending all the time and energy writing our own booklet, we should send him $36 for his "Books-By-Mail Business Kit." This kit contains 10 already-written "how-to" books (None of these "books" could be more than 20 pages in length. Someone who had already bought the kit gave me the opportunity to flip through them.) and a permanent copyright license allowing the purchaser to reproduce and sell the material by mail for as much and as long as he or she wants. Here a few of the titles:

—How to Accomplish Anything You Want in Life
—How to Make Up to $750 Next Weekend
—Secrets of the Richest People
—How to Sell Information by Mail (I'm sure one of the hottest sellers)

Bob Bobala

His reason for giving others his own books to sell for themselves is that the market for this material is so big that it would be much too great a burden for his small publishing company to supply the nation's needs. Of course, we know the real reason. It's not that he's trying to earn a living by conning people into buying his material, giving them the false hope that they too can sell it themselves and be as successful as he has been. The real reason is that, in essence, Mr. Wright is trying to reproduce himself. He's an egotist who would like to create a whole generation of people in his own image — people who try to make a living by selling information through the mail. Some psychological counseling might be a good idea.

I suppose I shouldn't knock him. After all, if he can afford to take out page length advertisements in different magazines and he has a business in Santa Monica, he must be making some decent money. But I won't believe that someone else can do just as well as he has until I meet the person. And I don't believe I would make $1 million in 9 months by selling 20-page booklets for $5 a piece like the original ad I saw guaranteed.

Funny thing about that guarantee in the first ad. Once I got the information I sent my money for, the "iron clad" guarantee (in his newsletter) went down from $1 million in 9 months to $25,000 in 30 days, which is only $225,000 over a 9-month period. My profits from selling information by mail seem to be shrinking before I even get started.

Jenifer to address Faculty Senate

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Franklyn Jenifer, the state's highest education official, is scheduled to address the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate today.

Jenifer plans to discuss his proposal for restructuring Massachusetts' higher education system and the counter-proposal offered by UMass trustees, said Terry Zoulas, spokesman for the Board of Regents.

Under Jenifer's proposal, UMass/Boston campus would be separated from UMass/Amherst, allowing Boston to have

The proposal also calls for the consolidation of the University of Lowell and Southeastern Massachusetts University into a single university system. ULowell's name would change to UMass/Lowell, and Southeastern Massachusetts University would have the option of keeping the SMU title, or changing it to UMass/Dartmouth.

A question and answer period, where Jenifer will field questions concerning the proposed $108 tuition hike and the constraints of the proposed 1990 budget, is scheduled to follow his speech, Zoulas said.

Also on the agenda:

[bullet]The election of a new Faculty Senate Secretary.

[bullet]A vote to approve the new courses recommended by the Academic Matters Council. The four courses up for approval include History of the Earth; Pricing and Markets in the Hospitality Industry; Industrial Robot Design, Selection Land Implementation; and Soviet Culture.

Fire on USS Iowa causes explosion; 47 killed

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A huge gun turret packed with gunpowder exploded in flames on the battleship USS Iowa near Puerto Rico yesterday, killing at least 47 sailors in one of the worst naval disasters since the Vietnam War.

The death toll from the accident, which happened during a gunnery exercise, "could go higher, but we don't know at this point," said Lt. Cmdr. Steve Burnett, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet, based in Norfolk.

He said the number of crewmen injured had not been determined.

Two ships participating in the same exercise collided yesterday afternoon about 500 miles east of Jacksonville, Fla., causing one minor injury, said Archie Galloway, a civilian public affairs officer at Norfolk.

Neither the USS Platt, a fleet oiler, nor the frigate USS Tripp was in danger of sinking, Galloway said. The ships were not in the same area as the Iowa.

Iowa crewmen put out a fire inside the forward turret, which supports three of the ship's nine 16-inch guns, flooded several compartments holding explosives as a precaution, and declared the ship no longer in any danger, said Lt. Cmdr. Chris Baumann, another spokesman for the fleet.

The Iowa rendezvoused at midafternoon with the nearby aircraft carrier USS Coral Sea, which carries three doctors and has full medical equipment to the Iowa, and transferred some of the injured to the carrier.

The Iowa will proceed today to Roosevelt Roads, a Navy base in Puerto Rico, said Cmdr. Robert Franzmann of the Atlantic Fleet. The 48-year-old ship, one of the four largest in the fleet, is based at Norfolk.

Navy officials were notifying family members personally of the deaths, Baumann said.

Source: Salcido arrested in Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Ramon Salcido, a California winery worker wanted in the slaying of seven people, including his wife and two of his three little daughters, was arrested in Mexico, a US Embassy source said yesterday.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Salcido, 28, was arrested in a rural area around Ciudad Obregon, 900 miles northwest of Mexico City in Conora state.

"He is in the custody of the Federal Judiciary Police. Salcido was arrested in a rural area around Ciudad Obregon, that's my understanding. We have no other details," the source said.

US Embassy spokesman Bill Graves said he had no details around the arrest and didn't know if Salcido is an American Citizen. "We don't know for the moment what his citizenship is," he said.

Vicente Mendoza, a spokesman for the attorney general's office, said he could not confirm or deny the report. The Federal Judiciary Police is a branch of the attorney general's office.

"We have no information for the time being," he said. Ciudad Obregon is 120 miles north of Salcido's hometown of Los Mochis.

The arrest came a day after California authorities reported numerous possible sightings of Salcido.

Services were being held in Glen Ellen, Calif., today for some of the six members of Salcido's family who were killed. About 300 people attended a memorial service Tuesday for another of the victims, Tracy Toovey. Twenty sheriff's deputies attended to keep an eye out for Salcido.

Police capture Norfolk jail escapees

DEDHAM, (AP) — Only one of 13 men who broke out of jail earlier this month remained at large yesterday, officials at the Norfolk County House of Correction said.

Two inmates were captured Tuesday, one in Boston and the other in Saugus, said a jail spokesman who declined to give his name.

Saugus Police Sgt. Arthur P. Cook apprehended Robert Louis Anzalone, 20, of Chelsea on Tuesday after a witness spotted the escapee and his girlfriend allegedly trying to steal a car.

Cook chased Anzalone through a stored before cornering him in the parking lot of the New England Shopping Center, where the arrest was made, police said.

Anzalone could receive the maximum 10-year sentence in state prison, said Lucille Cassis, a spokeswoman for Norfolk County Sheriff Clifford Marshall.

Also recaptured was James Melton, 18, of Dorchester.

The remaining escapee was Antonio Celester, 26, of the Roxbury section of Boston.

Anzalone was awaiting trial for breaking and entering when on April 7 he and 12 other inmates cut through window bars at the Norfolk County facility in Dedham and climbed over a fence to freedom.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

Another victim feared in highway killings

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — A New Bedford woman who disappeared last summer may be the 11th victim of a serial killer or killers, Bristol County authorities said yesterday.

The remains of eight women between the ages of 25 and 36 have been found since July along highways near this port city 40 miles south of Boston.

A total of three other women are missing and also feared dead.

Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina had previously identified two of the missing women as Christina Monteiro, 20, who vanished last May, and Sandra Botelho, 25, who disappeared Aug. 11.

"We are looking at the possiblity of there being another victim," Pina's spokesman, Jim Martin said yesterday.

The Boston Globe, citing unnamed sources, reported yesterday that the third missing woman was Marilyn Roberts. Martin would not confirm the identity but said the woman's family had been providing information to the district attorney.

"The family has said they have not seen or heard from her since last summer," Martin said. "They filed a missing person report with the New Bedford police."

Since then the family has heard reports that their daughter had traveled to different locations, but none of the sitings could be substantiated, he said.

"We do not have any concrete evidence right now either way, which is why we have to take the posture of the worst-case scenario," he said.

The Standard-Times of New Bedford reported that 34-year-old Marilyn J. Roberts, the daughter of a retired New Bedford police officer, was initially reported missing in April, but then seen in the city again in June. Her family reported her missing again in December, and her father, Robert Cardoza, asked police to keep an eye out for her after reports of the highway killings began.

The Globe and the Standard-Times reported that Robert's had ties to city's drug community, as did the eight victims and the two other women.

The Standard-Times said Roberts was a heroin addict and had been arrested on drug charges in 1984 and 1985, but unlike some of the other victims, she had no record of prostitution.

A squadron of police dogs trained to detect the scent of decayed human flesh was sent out for a second day yesterday to search the highways for corpses.

"They've got about 25 miles of roadways of southeastern Massachusetts they're going through," Martin said. "They're just going to keep working until it's done."

By tomorrow, the dogs are expected to finish scouring the main highways on which bodies have been found in the past, Martin said. Investigators will then decide where else to search.

A grand jury, which was first convenced in February to hear evidence in the case, is scheduled to recovene on April 27.

Committee: doctors can legally use fetus tissue

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors can ethically use tissue from aborted fetuses for research and medical treament, a committee at Stanford University concludes.

The guidelines, drawn up by an ethics committee at Stanford's Medical Center, are similiar to rules proposed by a federal committee last December.

Some experts believe it may be possible to treat a variety of diseases by transplanting tissue taken from aborted fetuses.

The Stanford guidelines, published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, include:

- Women who undergo abortions should not benefit directly from the medical use of their fetuses. They should not be reimbursed for their abortions.
- Medical personnel who perform abortions also should not profit from the use of the fetal tissue.
- Fetal tissue should be treated with the respect given to cadavers.
- Fetuses should not be aborted for the specific purpose of using their tissue.

While noting that abortions remain "intensely controversial," the report concluded that human fetal tissue can be used for medical purposes "subject to certain important considerations."

Search continues for two remaining crewmen

BOSTON (AP) — The search for two crewmen swept to sea after their ship sank continued for a third day yesterday, with rescuers holding out hope that the temperate waters of the Gulf Stream might help the men stay alive.

Aiding in the search was a long-range plane and a US Coast Guard cutter carrying the 23 sailors who were rescued after the Star of Alexandria sank in stormy seas about 400 miles southeast of Cape Cod Monday morning.

"It's planned to continue throughout the day and at that point they will re-evaluate," said Petty Officer Jeff Crawley.

Spotters aboard the plane were directing the cutter, Chilula, still carrying the other survivors, he said.

Tuesday, rescuers aboard a search plane reported spotting one of the missing crewmen, but found no further signs, Crawley said.

"Both crewmen are being presumed to be alive," he said. "They're near the Gulf Stream. The water temperature isn't that cold."

Survivors said one of the missing men jumped overboard from the sinking ship and appeared to be injured. The other was wearing a life jacket when he washed off a life raft.

Tuesday, three of the US Coast Guard's long-range aircraft and several merchant vessels fanned out over 480 square miles of Atlantic Ocean where the Star of Alexandria went down.

State high court rules against trooper

BOSTON (AP) — A sharply divided state Supreme court upheld yesterday an award of nearly $1 million in damages to a Vermont motorist who underwent years of psychiatry after a state trooper yelled at him, locked him up and deprived him of medical treatment.

The court majority found the trooper and four high-ranking police supervisors liable for damages, while the three conservatives on the high court sided with the police officials.

The civil suit arose out of a Sept. 4, 1978 incident involving Robert Dobos, a self-employed dental technician from Stow, Vt., and former state Trooper Paul Driscoll, his superiors and the state of Massachusetts.

Dobos, who claimed to suffer from an acute case agoraphobia and became nearly house-bound after the incident, sued for emotional damages and diminished earning capacity. As a youth in Hungary, Dobos suffered child abuse and spent three years in a communist labor camp-traumas that he said were revived by his encounter with the Massachusetts trooper.

"He's thrilled," Dobos' attorney, David Casey, said of the court ruling. "This incident had a profoundly devastating effect on him. The jury didn't give him a lot of money because they thought he was faking it."

According to Casey, the court's ruling affirmed the $400,000 jury award. With a decade's worth of interest, the lawyer said the judgement would be worth more than $900,000. Casey said he expected the state to indemnify all the individual defendants and pay Dobos with taxpayer funds.

Court records recount that on Sept. 4, 1978, Dobos was driving with his wife and daughters on Route 128 in Boston's western suburbs when the driver of another vehicle began harrassing him. Dobos forced the other car the roadside, and both motorists stopped.

Dobos' wife flagged down a passing State Police cruiser, and a few minutes later, another cruiser driven by Driscoll pulled up. Driscoll helped take statements, then issued citations to both drivers.

According to the court, Driscoll began screaming at Dobos: "You are not the law. I am the law. You don't pull nobody off the road." Driscoll jabbed Dobos in the chest, then handcuffed him and tossed him in the cruiser.

Dobos was placed in a cell at the Framingham barracks and denied medical attention. When his wife asked for help, Driscoll told her: "We don't ask doctors to come here. If you insist on medical help, we're going to send your husband to a mental hospital in a straightjacket if necessary..." Later, Dobos fainted in his cell.

At trial, Dobos testified that he was born in Budapest and that he was physically abused by his military father. When he was 21, he was taken from his parents' home by secret police and placed in a labor camp, where he was also abused.

After the roadside incident, Dobos began to fear going out of his house and received weekly psychological therapy for years.

His civil suit sought damages from Driscoll and the state. Also named as defendants were the state of Massachusetts and four men who were Driscoll's supervisors at the time: Robert Hunt, a troop commander; James Canty, a lieutenant colonel; Frank J. Trabucco, a colonel; and John F. Kehoe Jr., the commissioner of the State Police.

All of the individual defendants have since retired from the State Police. Driscoll left the force in December 1986 on a disability pension and now lives out of state.

Evidence presented at trial indicated that Driscoll had been the target of previous civilian complaints and that his superiors had recommended that he be removed from field operations and "have no direct contact with the public."

Police chief threatens future of Boston Marathon

BOSTON (AP) — The police chief in suburban Framingham has threatened to hold next year's Boston Marathon for ransom, denying a permit for his two mile stretch of the route unless someone pays the overtime for his officers.

But other officials overseeing security along the way of the venerable 26.2-mile footrace, as well as the race director himself, say they hoped to settle a money matter they all share.

Monday was the 93rd running of the marathon, founded and still organized by the Boston Athletic Association. But it was only the third year in which corporate sponsorship, totaling slightly more than $1 million this year, made money available to the state and the eight communities that previously donated services.

"I do assume the BAA will be picking up more and more of the expenses incurred here," said state Secretary of Public Safety Charles Barry, who is trying to get the towns and the BAA to sort out the money matter.

"I'm sure that we will negotiate out something," he said in an interview Tuesday.

Corporate sponsors provided a bit more than $1 million, said race director Guy Morse. Of that pot, $140,000 was set aside for public services, he said.

"We anticipated that when we got into this (sponsorship) arrangement," Morse said, "the towns should share in this because of all they do for us."

Morse said Boston, Newton and the state each will receive about $22,000.

the start, much to the visitors' advantage.

The score stood at 2-2 after one and 4-4 at the half, a big change from what many had expected to be a Gorilla coast.

"We surprised ourselves, we came out flat," Codignotto said. "We're a better team, but we should have had more control."

UMass took an 8-6 lead after three, as the second line of Bill Begien, Chris Tyler, and Mike Cain again provided the jump start as it did last Saturday against Yale. Begien and Tyler each scored late in the third to give UM the lead.

It grew to 10-7 in the fourth as McAleavey (two goals, four assists) and senior attack Paul Ganci (three goals, two assists) set each other up, giving UM its biggest lead with just 8:57 left. But the Green came storming back, tallying three times in less than four minutes to deadlock it.

The rally pumped Dartmouth up, and it had several good bids to win. But senior goalkeeper Sal LoCascio (20 saves) rose to the challenge in the end, stopping Brett Morrison's game-winning bid in tight with a minute left, and then forcing a turnover to flush Dartmouth's last golden opportunity.

Route 9 toward Noho, they will see a declaration of such painted on the roof of the Ciaglo barn), had decent numbers while at Springfield. But he was a little wild, with 58 walks and 11 wild pitches in 94.3 innings.

A summer with the Bourne Braves of the Cape Cod League taught him to relax more, and the change of scenery to UMass brought better training and better instruction. Ciaglo attributes much of his success to pitching coach Bob Rikeman.

"The difference is in pitching coaches. Springfield didn't have one, and the workouts weren't anything like they are here," Ciaglo said. "Here I'm getting into good work habits. It all has to do with being in shape and being mentally tough."

The results have been positive, as Ciaglo has gained better control (just 21 hits and 13 walks in 37 innings), and with it, better notoriety.

"I knew coming here I'd get noticed a lot more," he said. "I would have had attention this year [at Springfield] but not as much. I still think I would have had a following, but I thought I could help UMass out."

And he raised a few more eyebrows last Saturday when, on a rainy and raw day in Kingston, RI he threw the first no-hitter for UMass since Ralph 'Lefty' Lumenti did it in 1957. Despite the gem, UMass lost the game to Rhode Island, 1-0.

"I'm glad I threw the no-hitter, but my goal was to stay undefeated," said Ciaglo, who is now 4-1 with a 1.95 earned run average. "It was tough to lose that game. It's still a no-hitter, but that takes a little away from it."

If anything comes out of the no-hitter, it will be that Ciaglo improved his chances to be drafted in June. The Atlanta Braves and Toronto Blue Jays are among the teams he has heard from already. Pro ball is his ambition, but he doesn't know if he'd answer the call a year early, as several Minutemen did last season.

"That's my goal, but I'd still like to get a degree," Ciaglo said. "It would depend on my future chances, and 'what do they think of me'. I'd rather stay because I enjoy playing here, but if someone is willing to give me a decent offer, who knows."

Right now though, today's game against his former mates is Chief in his mind. Ciaglo is not scheduled to pitch.

"I wouldn't mind it, but I'm glad I'm not pitching because I'd be pitching against my friends," he said. "But it would be down to business. They'd want to hit a home run just like I'd want to strike them out."

Whether he pitches today or not, Ciaglo will be in the other dugout, knowing that his move to UMass was one that worked out well for both he and his team.

Gorillas win in dramatic fashion: 11-10 in OT

Codignotto gets a redeemer

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Welcome to the Jungle: The UMass men's lax team was just that one goal better than Dartmouth College yesterday at the Boyden field.

All things considered, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is very lucky to have pulled this one out.

The Gorillas (now 8-1, ranked eighth in the nation) had been pushed into overtime by unheralded Ivy League foe Dartmouth College (4-4), before senior attack Rob Codignotto's goal 1:21 into the extra period finally settled matters much later than most people would have preferred, giving UMass a hard-fought 11-10 win yesterday afternoon at Boyden Hill.

UMass had watched the Big Green, who played bigger than life all afternoon, rally from a 10-7 deficit midway through the fourth quarter to tie it. Both teams had chances at the end of regulation and in overtime to put it away.

But it was Codignotto, the fourth attack in a three-attack offense, who finally stuck the fork in the cake as he rolled off a defender on the left side and broke in on net, bouncing a shot past goalkeeper Rob Hollister just under the right crossbar.

It was a pay-back goal for Codignotto, who had missed a chance to win it with 10 seconds left in regulation when he rushed into traffic in front of the net and dropped the ball.

"It was an IOU," Codignotto said. "I felt I had the short stick, [Jim] McAleavey drew his man behind the net and they were covering Scotty [Hiller], so I took the opening."

Just moments earlier, Dartmouth had a chance to win it with a restart from the top of the box. But midfielder Peter Turk, who had a pair of goals already, fanned on a shot. Defender Tom Bonnet cleared it and UMass set up for the winning tally.

The Gorillas also could have taken it just before the end of regulation. Coach Dick Garber called a time out to set up a final shot, but Codignotto missed on his initial chance.

"We were hoping to get it inside, to draw everyone in, and then get it out to [Codignotto]," Garber said. It didn't work out, and Dartmouth cleared, setting up the sudden-death frenzy.

UMass sloshed around in the first half, unable to shake a ball-control Dartmouth tempo that sucked up the UMass fast breaking ways like a sponge. The Green succeeded to take the Gorillas and the crowd out of the game from

Softball heads to Boston College after splitting a pair with Rhody

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team will get reacquainted with Totman field this afternoon, hosting the Eagles of Boston College (7-4-1) for a pair of games beginning at 3 p.m. UMass has not played in front of the home folks since sweeping Penn St. and St. Bonaventure in a four game stand 11 days ago.

Since then, the Minutewomen (10-14) have played five consecutive road games, slumping to a 1-4 record, including Tuesday's split at the University of Rhode Island.

UMass busted what had been to that point a three-game slide with a 3-0 win in the opener, then fell in the second contest of the afternoon 2-1.

Holly Aprile took the decision at both ends, throwing a complete game shutout in the opening match, then relieving starter Chris Wanner in sixth inning of the second game with the score then tied at 1-1.

The Lady Rams broke through in the bottom of the eighth to hand Aprile the loss. It began with a walk to Michelle Leach — a wild pitch then sent Leach second base.

URI's Lisa Payne singled Leach to third, and Kathy Tewey ended the ball game with a single.

Throughout the second game, Tewey spent the afternoon defensively on the mound for the Lady Rams and allowed nine hits and 11 baserunners, only one of which crossed home plate for the Minutewomen.

UMass scored the first run of the ballgame in the top of the second frame, as Chris Wanner singled and advanced on a sacrifice bunt. Another hit and a bunt loaded the bases for Jen Devlin, who delivered Wanner with a solid single.

Tewey avoided further damage by stabbing a ground ball by Jen Miller that was headed up the middle, then keying a pitcher-to-home-to-first double play that ended the inning.

After the Lady Rams knotted things up in the bottom half of the second inning, the game cruised along scorelessly until Tewey's offensive heroics in the eighth.

Aprile fanned four without issuing a single walk in the first game of the afternoon. URI threatened only in the first inning, when it had runners on first and second with no outs on the board. Aprile recovered to retire the next three batters, and threw zeros the rest of the game.

Teammate Barbara Meehan provided all the offense Aprile would need, driving in two runs with a double in the top of the first.

The UMass women's tennis team will be on the road again today. The Minutewomen travel to Hartford for their second-to-last scheduled meet of the season. This past weekend the Minutewomen finished a disappointing seventh at the Atlantic 10s at Penn State and then lost to UConn on Tuesday.

Bicycle Club hosts cycling championship

The University of Massachusetts Bicycle Racing Club is hosting the Eastern Collegiate Cycling Championships throughout local towns this Saturday and Sunday.

The race will consist of three stages. On Saturday there will be a 70 mile road race in Shutesbury. On Sunday there will 15 mile time trial race on route 47 in Sunderland and finally a 40-mile criterium race later that same day. Each stage has four seperate catagories: men's A varsity, men's B jr. varsity, men's C novice, and women.

More than 400 racers are expected to participate in the event from 40 different schools including Cornell, New Hampshire, Harvard, Rutgers, and Penn State among others. There will be former national team and olympic caliber riders such as Peter Vollers, Doug Tanner, and Chuck Lawrence. Former Pan-am team member Dick Ring will be starting the races and acting as an announcer.

Presently UMass is the defending E.C.C.F. champion because of last year's victory at Cornell University in Ithaca NY. UMass rider Burt Jones finished as the overall men's champion and Stephaine Roussos finished 2nd overall for the UMass women's team.

Today's non-league game at Springfield College will be more than just a "middle of the week" game for at least one member of the University of Massachusetts baseball team.

Junior lefthander Paul Ciaglo played for the Chiefs during his first two collegiate seasons before transferring to UMass last Fall. It was this move that has prompted him to become one of the best pitchers around in 1989.

Ciaglo has no regrets about his decision to start his collegiate career at Division II Springfield, or his move up Route 91 to UMass.

"I wanted to play in college instead of sitting around," Ciaglo said. "but I had it in my mind to move up. I knew this program was much better, and I wanted to step up the ladder, to get more games and better competition."

Jenifer asks faculty to back plan

Wants UMass to be competitive

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

The state's highest public education official addressed the University of Massachusetts faculty senate yesterday, vowing not to make a rash decision in restructuring the public higher education system in Massachusetts.

"We're not going to rush into things we haven't looked at fiscally," Franklyn Jenifer, chancellor of higher education in Massachusetts said to about 100 UMass faculty senators. "I don't have any intention of rushing into it."

"It's a good strategy to move forward, we need tremendous momentum to do something now," Jenifer said. "We must be careful not to move too fast that we make errors, but move we must." He said competition between public universities and colleges in Massachusetts will improve the whole system. "If you're the best, prove it, and you will get the money you deserve," he said. "Greatness and quality don't come cheap."

He urged faculty at UMass to engage in the "Challenge for excellence."

"We must compete for money, and show that UMass deserves it," he said. "If you are capable, you'll get it."

"I believe the system of public higher education in Massachusetts can and should be one of the best systems in the nation," Jenifer said.

He said the "Saxon Plan," recommended by the board of trustees at UMass, will not allow UMass to take the lead, but his plan, the "Jenifer Plan," can achieve this goal.

Jenifer used the address as an opportunity to lobby the Jenifer Plan to the senators. The proposal would make UMass-Boston a separate entity from the UMass-Amherst campus and the UMass-Worcester medical school. Both would have separate presidents and boards of trustees.

He said concentrating money on individual campuses improves the structure of the entire higher education system.

The trustees' plan would combine the three UMass campuses with the Universtiy of Lowell and Southeastern Massachusetts University. The five campuses would be governed by one president and board of trustees.

He said the trustees' plan will not allow higher education in Massachusetts to accomplish excellence because, "You don't build it by a peanut butter budget."

"That's when you spread it all over the bread and everybody gets a bite and it all tastes nasty," he added.

He said most of the changes made in restructuring the system will require some form of change and aid from Massachusetts legislators.

Jenifer commended Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, for his work for funding for higher education.

"He put forward [the Rosenberg Amendment] that I didn't think would go anywhere until the votes started coming in," Jenifer said. "He made political moves, he came very close."

The Rosenberg Amendment, asking for $20.7 million to be put back in the budget, was defeated in the House by five votes.

Military protesters to be arraigned today

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

The seven students who were arrested Wednesday on charges of trespassing and disorderly conduct will be arraigned today in Hampshire District Court, Tammy Jones, the procedures clerk said yesterday.

Six University of Massachusetts students, Frank E. Bowrys III, Loyda Guzman, Laura J. Morrisette, Diane Ditmore, Andrew J. Sirulnik and John S. Langford, and one Hampshire College student, Randolph L. Viscio, are scheduled to appear in court today at 9 a.m.

The students were arrested yesterday after a six-hour takeover of a laboratory in Marcus Hall. They said they were protesting military-sponsored research at UMass.

Several students and area residents are expected to show their support for the demonstrators outside the courthouse before and during the arraignment, according to Bowrys.

"We're going to mobilize people to be there at 8:30 a.m.," he said. "We're hoping for at least two dozen people to show their commitment to our cause."

The demonstrators are planning another rally for Monday at 12 p.m. to "get the word out that the battle is not going to stop," said Jonathan Leavitt, a representative from People for a Socially Responsible University.

"We're going to present our case on Monday to the administrators that they drop the charges," Leavitt said. "We are also going to insist that a student board is set up that has binding power over police."

Negative posters mar CAG campaign

Gordon passes out posters to friends

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The first of what is expected to be a long line of negative campaign posters surfaced this week, targeting a recent decision to re-run the Commuter Area Government presidential election.

The poster, which was produced by an unknown source, was apparently directed at co-candidates Robb Smith and Ted Chambers, who were defeated by four votes on April 11 by co-candidates Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes. Voting discrepancies in the first election were cited as the reason for a second election, according to CAG elections coordinator Jennifer MacNeish.

The poster read: "WAAAHHHH!!! We want a new election. We lost and we wanted to win. We wantred (sic) to spend your money on all of the LBGA socials instead of concerts [.] once again, VOTE AGAINST CORRUPTION."

The poster was the second to be circulated claiming the Smith/Chambers camp denounces spring concerts, which both sets of candidates said was untrue. During his term as acting CAG president, Smith said he gave $8,000 for the production of Eastside concerts to be held this spring.

The day of the first election was marked by considerable negative postering directed toward the Smith/Chambers campaign, which the co-candidates said may have been largely responsible for their defeat because there was no way to inform students that the claims were false.

The pair immediately contested the elec-

Homophobic note's scars now healing

Close knit Smith students working together

By LAURA KLIVANS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — More than two months after a homophobic note was left on a Smith College student's door, the student and other Hubbard House residents have "moved on" from the incident that all considered upsetting.

According to house Head Resident Leslie Morton, on Sunday, Feb. 12, a first-year student and resident of the house found a homophobic note outside her door. She at first thought the note, which read "Lesbians are the curse of God," was a joke because of the way it was worded, Morton said.

News Analysis

She pinned it on the door and assumed the writer would come forward and take responsibility for the note, Morton said, but when no one did, the student gave the note to Morton.

At the house's Feb. 13 lunch, the recipient made an announcement and said if the note's writer stepped forward the matter would be dropped, Morton said, adding no one did. A house meeting was then called, she said.

Again the perpetrator was asked to come forward, and again no one did, Morton said, adding she then turned the note over to Associate Dean for Student Affairs Carol Weinberg.

Weinberg began an investigation of anonymous notes and messages, she said.

Morton said it was determined that the note was left the night of Feb. 12. She said that student security records indicated the note was left by someone within the house, rather than a visitor.

Weinberg said there was no way of knowing positively whether it was an in-house incident.

Morton said she asked house members what they did the night of the incident, and gave this information to Weinberg. Weinberg said she also asked students, especially those near the recipient's room, to come speak to her.

Morton said the note was checked for fingerprints but none were discernible. The note was sent to a handwriting specialist in Boston who determined that the handwriting was disguised. According to Morton, nobody within the house was pinpointed and some residents were disqualified. The investigation into the identity of the writer was finally closed last month, more than a month after the initial incident, she said.

Weinberg said closing the investigation was frustrating for house members because residents "want to have some resolution to things."

Morton said Student Affairs' involvement did not end with the failure to find the writer. "[Student Affairs] did not just turn their backs and go," she said. "Everyone at Student Affairs is concerned with the aftermath."

Morton said the house has about 50 residents, many of whom are friends.

"It is a very close-knit house, people care a lot about each other," she said. The house atmosphere is "almost familial," she said, which is why the incident was "a blow to some people. . . . You realize you don't really know everyone as well as you think you do."

Morton said because of the students' relationships, it was easier for students to be supportive, adding this might have been a reason the recipient of the note plans to remain in the house next year.

"It's encouraging that people in the house cared enough to move on from it," Morton said, adding that people deal with problems in different ways.

She said she tried to create a forum in which people could ask questions about the incident and about homophobia. After the incident, workshops in lesbian awareness were scheduled, as well as an ongoing series of informal talks.

"Anything like this has a real major effect on people," Weinberg said. As far as dealing with future problems similar to the February incident, Weinberg looks to education. "I view myself as a educator rather than an investigator," she said.

She said, however, that the "prevailing mood should be clear that . . . some things are not acceptable."

UMass employees look to join union

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Professional employees at the University of Massachusetts have petitioned to unionize, hoping to join Service Employees International Union local 509, representatives announced yesterday.

More than 650 professional employees, of about 1,300 on the Amherst and Boston campuses, signed cards supporting the petition, said Tom Coish, a staff attorney with the Legal Services Center.

The professional staff organizing committee petitioned the state Labor Relations Commission to authorize a vote to approve or reject the union, said Tom Goodkind, a representative from UMass/Boston.

"The support in Boston is absolutely solid for local 509," he said.

Organizers hope a voting date will be set for no later than the end of May.

The professional staff, which includes employees such as nurses, engineers working in the physical plant, lawyers, research machinists and academic advisors, are organizing because they have no representation with the UMass Trustees and are therefore being subjected to lay-offs and merit pay holdbacks, Goodkind said.

"Right now, the professional staff has been singled out," as the place to make cost saving cuts, he said.

Goodkind said a layoff policy approved by the Trustees for the Boston campus at their last meeting is already going into effect and between 30-45 employees, about 10-15 percent of the total professional staff, have received their pink slips.

If the vote goes in favor of the union, Coish said representatives will immediately begin to develop a platform to present to the University Board of Regents.

In order for the union to be accepted, 50 percent of those voting plus one have to vote in favor of the proposal, said Goodkind.

No official position has been declared by the regents but the organizers have "heard some rumors that some high level officials have said it would be stupid not to unionize at this point," Coish said.

BOG passes motion to aid RSO rights

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors passed a resolution last night that would prevent the Board from kicking student organizations out of the Campus Center/Student Union complex solely because of a viewpoint expressed by the organizations.

The resolution, presented by Gov. Steven Sinofsky, was passed in response to recent incidents involving Registered Students Organizations including the Spartacus Youth League and the Republican Club, both denied use of office space in the Student Union after a February altercation, said Sinofsky.

"[The BOG's] function is to serve the students," he said. "We should not be the people to judge student organizations' actions."

Sinofsky was met with some debate by Gov. Jason Kofman who said, "Would the resolution hinder the BOG's ability to prevent groups such as the Ku Klux Klan and the White Supremacists from coming to campus?"

Gov. Stephen Bayer, a representative of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance, said he is concerned with the BOG's ability to prevent campus visits from groups intending to harm lesbian, bisexual and gay students.

In response, Sinofsky said, "I would be more comfor-

Poll: Budget cuts hurt students

But students wouldn't dissuade others from enrolling

By TOM CIAMPI
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students overwhelmingly agreed budget cuts have negatively affected their college careers, but balked at saying they would dissuade others from enrolling here, according to a poll conducted this week by the Collegian.

Students answered five questions in a random telephone survey, 82 of the 100 students polled said their college careers have been "negatively affected" by budget cuts, while only 18 said their careers have "not been affected."

Yet, when asked what they would do "If a friend or relative was considering enrolling at UMass," 74 responded they "would warn them of the effects of the budget cuts, but not dissuade them from enrolling." 17 said they would unconditionally recommend enrolling at UMass, while nine said they would suggest enrolling else.

Students cited deteriorating classrooms and buildings, overcrowded classes, and the lack of experienced professors most often when explaining in what ways the budget cuts had affected them.

Some students said recommending enrollment at the University was dependent on the prospective student's intended major. One mechanical engineering student said, "If the person was enrolling in this department, I'd say 'definitely,' but if it was English I might not say that."

One disgruntled student, a sophomore communications major, said "I'd never recommend this school to anyone. I spend the first two weeks of every semester begging professors to let me in their classes, just so I'll get enough credits."

Students were also asked if their chances of receiving a "quality, college education" had been diminished by the lack of available classes. Sixty-four of the 100 said their education has been "negatively affected," while 36 said their education had not suffered as a result of the class shortage. That the University is still regarded as a favorable learning institution is further confirmed by a closer look at the student responses: 55 students said they have been negatively affected by both the lack of classes and the budget cuts in general, but 89 percent of those said they would still recommend the University to others. Eleven percent said they would not recommend enrollment at the University.

None of those responding to the poll said their education was "positively affected" in any way by either the lack of classes or by the budget cuts in general.

The poll, which coincides with the second week of preregistration, also asked students what they felt their chances were of receiving the courses they wanted next semester. More than one-third of the students said they had a "good" chance of getting their classes, and nine students boasted that they had an "excellent" chance. 31 said they had a "fair" chance, and 18 said they stood "little or no chance" of receiving the classes they wanted most.

One student, a BDIC major, said his success in securing classes is a result of his expressing interest beforehand to professors who will be teaching the courses he wants.

Nearly two-thirds of the students polled said they planned on registering for extra classes this week to assure themselves of getting more of the classes they want.

tion, citing the negative campaigning and procedural errors during voting as grounds to invalidate the results and hold a new election.

MacNeish said at least one vote was cast by a student from the Greek area, which is not considered part of the Commuter area, and cited 13 other errors where student voter's credit eligibility was in question.

The CAG Governing Board voted earlier this week to invalidate the election because of the procedural errors and dismissed claims of negative campaigning because there was no Constitutional basis for the complaint.

A new election is scheduled for Thursday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Hatch, but Sen. Robert Fadel said the plans could be stalled if someone appeals the Governing Board's decision, which he said is likely.

The originator of the posters remains a mystery, but several students said they saw Josh Gordon, a former Student Government Association presidential candidate, distribute negative campaign flyers during the first campaign.

Gordon said 50 posters denouncing the Smith/Chambers campaign were slid under his door and he distributed them to his friends in class and during his spare time spent at the Hatch, where the CAG elections were held.

The negative campaigning was "payback for the Liberator," Gordon said, claiming the newspaper, circulated in part by Smith and Chambers, "slandered" him during the SGA presidential election.

Josh Gordon

Gordon said he has used the MacIntosh computer lab in Herter Hall to print out "funny things" about Smith and Chambers, but said his sheets have not been used as poster material.

"I was doing the same thing they did to me," he said. "I negatively campaigned on them. I told [my friends] not to vote for them."

Student revived after suicide attempt at Newman Center

A 26-year-old University of Massachusetts student may have tried to hang himself in the Newman Center Wednesday, but the rope apparently broke and police were able to revive him, according to UMass police.

Police said the man was sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and then to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, where he is recovering.

According to police, several people walking by the Newman Center saw a man lying in the driveway and called police at about 11:30 p.m.

When police arrived, they found the man lying face down in a pool of blood in the driveway. Police found a clothesline rope tied in a noose fashion around his neck, with about 18 inches of rope attached to the noose. A piece of clothesline rope tied to the second-floor balcony of the Newman Center was also found, police said.

CPR was administered until an ambulance arrived.

In other police reports:

● Graffiti was reported scrawled on the Fine Arts Center walls Wednesday. Reference was made to military research in the writing on the walls, police said.

The vandalism was related to Wednesday's protest of military research funding.

A gas can caught on fire Wednesday when a physical plant employee was pouring gas into a tractor at North Village, police said. The Amherst Fire Department responded, and no injuries were reported.

Red Sox topple Indians, take third straight

By The Associated Press
and RICK SANTOS

CLEVELAND – Nick Esasky and Jim Rice each hit two-run home runs and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd pitched 6⅓ scoreless innings yesterday as the Boston Red Sox handed the Cleveland Indians their sixth consecutive defeat, 5-2.

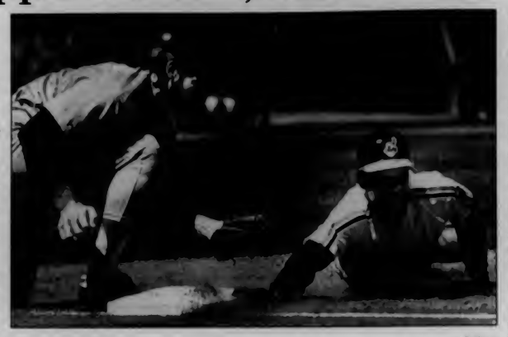
COMMENTARY

Boyd's success came two days after his comments about Red Sox Manager Joe Morgan's attitude toward him after his start was pushed back to allow Roger Clemens to pitch.

Imagine being Morgan and having to deal with the egos of cry-babies like Boyd, Clemens, and Rice.

Yesterday, Dwight Evans added a solo homer for the Red Sox, who have won three straight and seven of their last nine since beginning the season with four losses. Their 7-6 record makes them the only team in the American League East over .500. This doesn't say much for the East, does it?

Boyd, 1-1, allowed six hits, struck out three and walked one before Bob (the slob) Stanley came on to get Oddibe McDowell and Andy Allanson with two men on in the seventh.



AP photo

Cleveland's Oddibe McDowell, right, looks to the umpire after Red Sox first baseman Nick Esasky tagged out McDowell on a 3rd inning pickoff Thursday.

Boyd had allowed 10 earned runs in his first two starts and entered the game with an ERA of 11.25.

Mike Greenwell doubled off Rich Yett, 1-2, leading off the Red Sox fourth and Esasky hit his third homer off the upper deck in left. Esasky was 4 for 4 with the homer and four RBIs in Boston's 8-4 win Wednesday and is 9 for 19 against Cleveland this season with all of his home runs and seven of his eight RBIs earned against the Indians.

Greenwell had his second double and third hit with two out in the Boston eighth, and Rice followed with his second homer of the season. Rice has hit in 13 consecutive games, his longest streak since he hit in 15 straight in September 1983.

Cleveland's Keith Atherton relieved Yett and was greeted by Evans' third homer.

The Indians got two runs of Stanley in the eighth on consecutive two-out singles by Joe Carter, Pete O'Brien and Cory Snyder and Dave Clark's run-scoring double.

Lee Smith came on to strike out Brook Jacoby and allow one hit in the ninth, striking out two more batters, for his first save.

Engineers are people too

In response to the article by Aimee Tesney on the engineering world ("A friend who is out of her element", April 19), if your knowledge of the subjects with technical emphasis is limited, you should not put down the people who discuss them. People in this world have enough stereotypes to deal with without having to deal with the fabricated ones given by a person who is probably afraid to listen.

David Paratore

As engineers, my friends and I do not expect people who are listening to appreciate the topics that we are discussing. These topics may seem a bit out of reach for some, but they make up a good portion of our time on this campus. The discussions are very useful in giving us a chance to let off some steam caused by our classes.

Very few days go by without me hearing from someone about how hard it is to be an engineer. From day one of orientation, we are force fed the idea that we have the hardest major on campus and that we are the smartest people here. The idea of one major containing the brightest students is absurd. This is just another generalization about a group of people that should not be made.

The idea is simple, don't generalize. Don't make stereotypes. It hurts everyone in the end.

Like every other major, the personalities of the people in my major are very different. We have people like the one's you discussed as well as you do, I'm sure. We also have people who don't do much work, who go out, who practically live up town, and yes, even people who go out on weeknights. On almost any Friday night, you can go to Mike's Westview and find quite a few engineering majors there.

Everyone in this place is different. That's the whole idea of diversity. Being a Resident Assistant as well as an engineer, I have been exposed to many things, some technical, a lot social. I try to avoid using stereotypes. Sometimes I catch myself making fun of a Communications major, by saying that he or she is stupid, but I realize that it's wrong.

The major someone decides to enter is not the only thing that a person should be judged on. Judging someone by their major is as superficial as judging them by the clothes they wear, or the color of their skin. It's wrong, plain and simple.

So do yourself a favor and go out to lunch with those old engineering buddies. Strike up a conversation, one which you would like to discuss. Chances are you will find that they have opinions on many other topics. These people may not get a chance to express them, or they may not be the first things on their minds, but they do have them. You probably could teach them a few things. Maybe then you can do your share of enlightening someone or making someone more aware.

If everybody tried to do this, the people of this campus might be a little more sympathetic to the needs of others and realize that words can hurt someone. They sometimes can hurt more than sticks and stones, because words do not only hurt the person they are meant to, they also hurt the speaker by showing his or her ignorance.

Oh, by the way, I wouldn't suggest sitting in on Fluids. I've been a Mechanical Engineering student for three years along with my friends, and we're all clueless in it.

Remembering Abbie Hoffman

I was recently stunned to learn of the passing of Abbie Hoffman, a friend and renegade who embodied so much of the idealism and zaniness of the 60's.

The Hindus have a proverb that reads: "When the student is ready, the teacher appears." For me and several hundred students at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, Abbie Hoffman transformed an otherwise moody November morning into a lesson in dissent and empowerment as he spoke of the policies of the CIA.

Jay Allain

With a keen grasp of their covert interventions – Guatemala and Iran in the early 50's, Vietnam a decade later – Hoffman's eloquence ignited the quieted flames of righteousness that lay in our hearts. We marched with our leader to occupy the symbol of campus power, the main administration building.

Finding it barred, the aroused multitude seized an adjacent site, a bucolic brick building which ironically housed the Department of Information, a title Orwell would have relished. Prior to his oratory and mere presence, the campus had already been stung by controversy concerning the right of the CIA to recruit college students there. Abbie was the match.

A freewheeling occupation followed, an event which lasted for hours and included the visitation of Amy Carter, but finally the authorities had had enough. Close to fifty remaining protestors were handcuffed. Some had to be physically removed from the building. Even Abbie, the veteran himself, was shocked to find attack dogs and fully clad riot police waiting outside on the otherwise rarefied campus.

This was a scene he later compared to assaults on the Civil Rights marchers in Alabama, a true exaggeration. But that was part of his style, a persona which transcended itself when the circumstances and the media called for it. It was if he was saying, "Look, of course this is inflated rhetoric but I got your attention didn't I? Now listen to what's really happening."

With a youthful zeal, he believed whatever cause he advocated, everyone must encounter. His commitment and vision forced him into being arrested close to fifty times. One can imagine the man who seemed a cross between Gandhi and Groucho Marx sitting in jail telling jokes and stories.

His closing statement to the jury in the subsequent trial against the CIA is a clear distillation of his mature political thinking. He believed democracy itself was subversive – not something you believe in, something you do.

Increasingly concerned about today's youth, he ended his speech by appealing to them and evoking a Revolutionary war hero: "A verdict of not guilty will say what Thomas Paine said: Young people, don't give up hope. If you participate, the future is yours."

After a few hours of deliberation, Abbie and his cohorts wee found not guilty – the CIA was deemed involved in more serious acts than sitting-in.

Now almost two years to the day since that people's victory, Abbie is gone. He would want us to continue the good fight.

Separating politics from the music

Alise Harfield has obviously missed the whole point concerning the "Rattle and Hum" so-called controversy ("Political Movie Madness", April 18). The issue is not whether all U2 fans should be liberals, but that people don't like what members of the Republican Club and Minuteman do to other members of the community.

Recently, there have been a number of stories about these people allegedly assaulting members of various left-wing organizations. These allegations are not unfounded, nor are they surprising. It is obvious just by looking at the Senate, the lacking effectiveness of simple debate when some of these people are involved.

This year I've seen W. Greg Rothman waste time asking speakers at Senate meetings for their ID cards and asking Michael Greiner and Mark Wilkenson if they could prove their manliness – just two examples of the silliness surrounding the conservatives, and their alleged agenda.

This is why people are opposed to the Republican Club, not because of ideology. Obviously, the Republican Club knows this, and subsequently defied the request from the Student Activities Office to put their name on all advertising materials for "Rattle and Hum." Clearly, this is a group that knows how people feel about them, and their unwillingness to support them.

Nobody told anyone they couldn't see the movie, or that one was a jerk for going. People going to the film were simply asked to think about whether or not they wanted their $2.50 to fund the Republican Club. Many people chose not to endorse the club, while others had no problem with it. By spending your money that night, you were absolutely supporting the Republican Club.

As for the affiliation of the protestors, there were none. This was just a loose coalition of students, not an RSO. Apparently, Harfield doesn't want to believe people can act without the structure of an organization behind them.

Most U2 fans understand the band's politics, as you can't separate them from their music. You don't have to boycott anyone, or protest whatever you disagree with, but you are supposed to have the right to express what you want in this country, which is all anyone did that night. Hopefully, no one felt threatened by the protestors.

Ari Weinstein
Commuter Senator

Here comes the sun — and there it goes . . .

Ahhhhhh – it's Spring again.

And yet, I sit in front of a computer terminal, spending endless hours writing a seemingly endless number of term papers, book reports, and short essays.

On top of that there are the countless hours of editing and writing for the Collegian – hours spent in the basement of the Campus Center, where there are no windows, no fresh air, no glimpse of life outside these four concrete [and corkboard] walls.

I'm not complaining; I'm just suffering from lack of sunshine.

There seems to be an equation – something mathematical at least – that suggests that the warmer the temperature and the sunnier the day, the more likely I am to be inside, typing an 8-page paper.

In fact, you can tell who writes for the Collegian just by looking around you on campus – you won't find any of us. We're all down here, missing classes, missing sunshine, missing Spring, and writing for hours on end.

If you were lucky enough to find a Collegianite in one of your classes, note the pale skin, the clamminess, the tired expression. No Collegianite has the time to get a tan, and many of us haven't seen daylight [except early in the morning] since the last snowfall.

I still get exercise, mind you. I just shoot my hours worth of jumpshots at 11 p.m. There are advantages to this, such as the empty court, and the fact that when you throw an airball, many times it's too dark to see how far off the shot was.

Weekends were made for sleeping. After waking at 1 p.m., I gather my quarters to do laundry. Afterward I go shopping, then head to the library and then back to my apartment. Total time outdoors [not including driving or busriding] is about 30 minutes.

David R. Mark

No wonder everyone thinks I'm sick.

And grumpy.

And tired.

Yes, I realize we come to a university to receive an education. I'm aware of the great importance of my working at the largest college daily in New England. Undoubtedly I'm aware of how every hour of work I do now will pay off after I graduate.

I just want to take an afternoon walk. Is that so wrong?

I'm the starting catcher on the Collegian softball team. I figured, naively, that this would mean many an hour of fun-filled afternoons at the ballpark, allowing me to enjoy the warmth of the sun.

We've been rained out twice and have yet to play our first game.

In this a conspiracy? Or am I the only one at this school who has not yet seen the sun hit the campus pond – minus the ice?

This summer I'll be interning in New Jersey. Like this Spring, I'll spend the overwhelming majority of my daytime hours indoors. Beyond that I'll be confined to a shirt, tie and slacks, so even if I do go outside, I won't get a tan.

Makes me reminisce for yesteryear, when summer was the time I'd hit tennis balls with my Louisville slugger until dinner, from April 'til October.

This past summer, the best tan I got was the time I covered a fire at a train station. The heat from the fire made the skin on my face and arms reddish.

Nowadays the only red on my body is around my pupils, a side-effect of my life indoors and in front of my monochrome computer.

Leavitt and Bowrys said they foresee the possibility of at least one more occupation of the military-funded research laboratory following Monday's rally.

"We outsmarted them before and we'll be more prepared this time," Leavitt said.

Bowrys said some of the protestors may consider taking legal action against at least two of the police officers involved in the arrests. He said two of the protestors sustained injuries as a result of police brutality.

Dead Calm: a storm amidst worthy new releases

By JIM COLE
Collegian Staff

Finally it looks like the early spring doldrums are coming to an end. The crop of films lately have been abysmal, but it seems hope may be in sight.

Dead Calm wins my award for having the smallest cast and sets in recent memory, mainly since the whole film takes place at sea. John and Rae Ingram (Sam Neill and Nicole Kidman) are taking a long, restful vacation on their sailboat. It's not long before the quiet seas and solitude are shattered with the arrival of Hughie Warriner (Billy Zane), a panicked American escaping from a derelict ship the Ingrams discover.

THE SCREENING ROOM

He claims to be the only survivor of the crew, all victims of food poisoning, but John, and even the audience, know better. The minute he rows over to the ship to investigate, leaving his wife alone with this unstable guy, it's obvious where the film is headed. The nice surprise is that there is still suspense, as Rae tries her best to outwit Hughie with nowhere to run, and John ends up stranded on the sinking derelict.

The actors shine in a film that depends on good performances. Sam Neill (most familiar to American audiences as the adult Damien in the third Omen film The Final Conflict) is an actor I'd like to see more of since he does much more than use his good looks. He effectively conveys the frustration of one trying to stay alive himself, while dealing with his inability to save his wife. Nicole Kidman, looking slightly like a young Sigourney Weaver, has difficult scenes that she handles well, and is a promising newcomer, and Billy Zane is the perfect psychotic, immediately making me uncomfortable from his first appearance.

Unfortunately, this great premise doesn't explore all the possibilities. There are numerous times where Rae could clobber Hughie, but submits instead. When he finally gets it, the film cops out with him not being dead when you thought he was. Though it is adapted from an original 1963 novel, screenwriter Terry Hayes still could have done more with the material.

GO AHEAD MAKE MY DAY - Billy Zane is given a convincing ultimatum from Nicole Kidman in the Warner Bros. release Dead Calm

Despite the weaknesses, Dead Calm is still a welcome change of pace from most mainstream films, and still has its' share of chills. Check it out.

There are other films of merit that have opened recently. Say Anything is a well received teen comedy. It stars John Cusack, who always seems to be playing jilted teens, as a guy competing for the affections of Ione Skye. Though I haven't seen it, it's clear its' success is due to an intelligent, honest script. Major League is another baseball film, not nearly as witty as last year's Bull Durham, but entertaining nevertheless, while She's Out of Control is one I'm trying hard to avoid. Tony Danza is not my idea of a great film actor, and his part as a dad looking out for his "loose" teenage daughter does not sound like Oscar material. Spare yourself.

Torch Song Trilogy is still at the Academy of Music. It stars Harvey Fierstein and is adapted from his play. The story of a gay actor's struggles, it also stars Anne Bancroft as his overbearing mother, and Matthew Broderick (!) as one of his lovers. See it before it leaves the area.

The Amherst Cinema is featuring New York Stories, the compilation film by Martin Scorcese, Francis Coppola, and Woody Allen. With their renewed student discount of $2.50 with valid I.D., it's a great deal.

Lastly, there is a good crop of films opening today. Pet Sematary, is yet another film based on a Stephen King novel. This time, I have good expectations, as the preview actually raised hairs on the back of my neck. Newcomer Dale Midkiff moves his family to peaceful Maine and meets kindly old Fred Gwynne (best known as Herman Munster), who teaches him the secret of the "Pet Sematary," a makeshift graveyard where children bury beloved pets. Those pets return to life, sort of, and when Midkff wants to try it with a human, Gwynne advises him; "sometimes dead is better." If the film measures up to the book, audiences will agree wholeheartedly.

See You in the Morning is a romantic comedy about the effects of divorce and remarriage on two families. Starring Jeff Bridges, Farrah Fawcett, and Alice Krige, it sounds promising, but K-9, starring cop Jim Belushi and a German Shepherd . . . sounds like a dog. Sorry.

Local talent no joke for Valley funseekers

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Staff

Sometimes the words local talent aren't just an in joke, as several bands proved last weekend. Local talent means you don't have to pay a lot to see a good band that'll either make it or break up and start selling real estate. You can have a good time and not be broke for the privilege

So in brief. The Tavern, Hampshire College, Friday night: Mr. Softee, just starting up are Hampshire boys trying to play hardcore, but leaving potential slammers unsatisfied; they should learn to turn up the volume. Super Smile are kind of like The Cowboy Junkies on acid and are well worth watching, they've got that special something thing down.

The Lonely Moans are like Dinosaur Jr. without the self importance and with a lot more muscle. The drummer is exceptionally powerful, especially in combining vocals with some monster thrashing.

Saturday at Sheehans Cafe, a benefit for a compilation album of local talent: The Vestrymen have a lot of energy and were well into their noise. To make another cheap comparison: kind of like early R.E.M..

Beatrice U.T.B . . What to say? Well, they make fun of most everything (especially Petuli wearing folkettes), they make you laugh and usually make you dance (though not this night) with ever good solid loud music and ridiculously sensible lyrics.

The Malarians, who always seem to headline, always make the crowd dance which is all a band should want besides girls, drugs and credibility. Certainly the best of the bunch, if only because of all the time they've been together. Black turtle necked psychedelic thrash, loud pumped up fun. These boys should not break up before everybody gets a chance to see them. And . . .

They're playing at Club Soda on Gothic Street in Northampton this Saturday April 22nd. Show starts at 8:30p.m. with Gidget Goes to Hell(featuring Tim Eagan on a wailing, beautiful guitar) and The Thrashing Scumz body lining.

Club Soda opened recently (see feature next week in The Collegian) and is a non - profit club with a very good sound system and great accoustics. The club also welcomes all ages and is worth your time, especially with The Malarians headlining.

Finally the celibate but ever brilliant Supreme Dicks played to an open crowd at Joel's Speakeasy on Sunday for the 4th annual Bagel Celebration. They transcend mere words. The facial expressions in response to seeing them says part of it but these guys have to be experienced to be believed.

Dave Taub, the spiritual guru of the boys and all-round supreme man, is also partly reponsible for the Phurst Church of Fun, occurring at Hampshire College, Saga dining commons, Saturday night. "A ceclebration exploring the art of multisensory, multidisciplinary improvisation", this promises to be an orgy of sensory overload (call 584-6317 fo more info) and the perfect antidote for anyone who is, by now, sick and tired of local talent.

P.S. - from the Iron Horse: Tickets bought for both March 22 shows by the Plastic People of the Universe will be honored for one show only at 10 p.m. this coming Sunday, April 23 at the recently enlarged Iron Horse Cafe in Northampton.

No golf shots or tears at MUA night

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Staff

Last weekend, drivin'n'cryin', the headliners of the WMUA bash at the Bluewall, shared a few words of wisdom before shooting off to join R.E.M. on the third leg of their Green tour.

They said it was "about the 27th interview we've done in 36 hours," and requested that I not be too serious.

So, in the lobby behind the bank machines they talked about their hometown, Atlanta, Georgia, saying "It's the capital of the South, the music melting pot of America, a good place to go home to, and the music scene is friendly, not competitive." That's 27 interviews in 36 hours.

The band doesn't appreciate attempts to label them. "Label us under 'D'," says Kevin Kinney. "We're psychedelic, folk, rock and gospel and consciously friendly . . . our tapes are like a collection of my favorite 45's," the frontman added.

Any messages? "Try to make people assume the positive, to have fun and go crazy . . . we like to see people having a good time . . . going out of control. We like loud music and bowling," Kinney said.

Tim Nielsen, the bassist, pointed out his t-shirt, graced by the face of Michelle Malone who shares vocals on the band's wonder song "Straight To Hell" among others. "She's the most beautiful woman I know . . . I'm a lesbian trapped in a man's body," Nielsen said. 27 interviews in 36 hours.

Alcohol and philosophy: "Vodka makes you a soldier, bourbon a gorilla, rum - I'm a happy pirate, and beer's just a social beverage . . . we like people to have a few . . . it makes them loosen up, let it hang out more," said Brian Fowler, guitarist and former guitar tech for R.E.M.

All in all, though pretty tired, the band seemed friendly and interested . . . I think they asked more questions of me than I did them. "We're just trying to say that people should be more interested in some things other than themselves," Kinney said. Based on how they played later, they were obviously saving energy for the show.

Preceded by The Fortunetellers, who were not annoying, and by Even The Odd, whose new self-titled album is just out on the Wanga label (a good effort produced by Mitch Easter), in the words of WMUA's Jen Hughes, drivin'n'cryin' were "fuckin magnificent." It was also probably the last chance to see them for free. Too bad.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You radiate "star" quality today. Member of opposite sex is dazzled. Romance could bloom this weekend. Return calls promptly and write overdue letters. Some opportunities come only once.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A good weekend to travel. Do not give in and buy something that will make a large dent in your budget. Deal with relationship problems in a more mature way. Avoid petty squabbles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You will be in a more subdued mood today, making it easier to concentrate on work that needs to be cleared up before the weekend. Look on the bright side. Cash is on the way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You could receive news from someone you love at a distance. A legal battle involves you in something positive. Set your sights on important goals. Determination and hard work will take you to the top.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Try wining and dining someone you dreamed about romancing. Your confidence is in good shape. The success you have been striving for is within your grasp. Socialize with influential people.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A long-weekend getaway would do wonders for your spirits. You may be tempted into spending more money on yourself than your budget allows. Do not get in over your head.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) someone you are counting on for help is more than cooperative today. Use your powers of persuasion to convince a child to follow the right course. A chance encounter sparks exciting romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Impatience will only slow you down. Get better control of your feelings. A relationship could come to a surprising climax. Whatever happens will be for the best. The future looks brighter than ever.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Your finances will improve if you make the right choice today. Do not postpone something until Monday. Do it now! A "white elephant" purchase turns out to be a great buy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A money-making idea begins to take wing. Secrecy and good timing are of utmost importance. Choose your confidants with care. Be willing to take calculated risks in business and romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Move ahead with confidence. A financial situation is turning around in your favor. Marriage is on the minds of many. Wait until June to tie the knot. Travel later in the year.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Tangled communications could cause a work slowdown today. Honesty helps you sort out any relationship problems, putting you back on the road to happiness again. Be confident and others will follow your lead.

High seas: crew vs. Coast Guard

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts crew teams will race tomorrow morning against teams from the Coast Guard Academy and Worcester Polytechnical Institute at the Sportsman Marina in Hadley.

The women's team will race only against WPI.

"We should roll over them," said coach David Trond. The novice women have yet to win, and are looking forward to racing this weekend.

As for the men, they should have a tougher outing battling both teams. UMass crushed WPI last sesaon, while Coast Guard should prove to be a struggle.

The lightweight race is the big one for the UMass squad. They are coming off a big win against Trinity, a team that beat Coast Guard.

Rugby looks to get Tuft(s)

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Correspondent

"We will beat them." Strong words coming from the mouth of University of Massachusetts rugby coach Francis Buttle, especially since the team has lost 3 of its last 4 games but when UMass goes east to meet Tufts University there is reason for optimism. First of all the team is healthy. Tim Crowley, the club chairman, is back with the team after being sidelined with a fractured rib. Crowley was able to practice Wednesday, and sporting a flak jacket, seemed to have fair mobility. Eric Olsen also seems to be recovered from the ear infection that sidelined him from the Army game. The team is also disappointed about its showing in last week's tournament and the sentiment is that they should take it out on Tufts.

The team has been working on the speed of the games it has been playing. The weather has also been a factor. UMass plays a fast running game, and the weather has been very cold and wet, which has been slowing the team down.

"The team is improving," said Buttle. "There has been a dramatic shift in the game." Kickoff is at noon at Tufts.

Ken O'Brien.

"This was a good meet for us last year." says O'Brien. Perhaps the men will experience deja-vu tomorrow, and surprise the competition." It may seem like wishful thinking, but the Minutemen are coming off a solid meet in Durham, N.H. "Last week we had 95 percent improvement."

women's track

"They've had a history of not being very strong. They've got a new coach [Sherman Hunt], and things are changing quickly. He is now utilizing their scholarships."

"NU will be strong in the sprints and jumpers, where we're weak at. Brown will probably have someone good in every event."

Springfield coach Charlie Roys said. "At the beginning of the season, I felt we had the hardest working team we've ever had. But I wasn't sure if that would compensate for our lack of pitching depth but things have worked out well."

Springfield pitchers Sean Keating and Jim Woods held the Minutemen in check, and UMass' only real rally came in the third. Trailing 2-1, leadoff batter Brian Bright drew a walk and was sacrificed to second.

Drew Seccafico followed with a double to right to tie the game and, after a groundout, and a pair of walks loaded the bases. But Keating got Derek Dana to line out to second to end the threat.

Woods allowed another run in the ninth, but picked up his first win of the season and give the Chiefs their first win over UMass in Roys' 10-year career.

"We're real happy," Roys said. "Our four seniors have given us tremendous leadership and things have materialized well."

softball

"We're a come from behind team, we really hold together," said Miller. "Even though the hits haven't been coming, our defense has been real strong."

Holly Aprile pitched the entire game, allowing two hits and striking out six on the way to her seventh win of the spring. Only one of the three BC runs was earned.

Miller saved the second game from the chilling prospect of extra innings. With UMass up 2-1 and the tying run on second for BC, Nardone slapped a two-out ground ball towards right field which Miller intercepted on the fringe of the infield dirt, then shoveled to teammate Jen Vaillancourt at first base to end the ballgame.

"That was a great play," complimented Sortino.

Women's tennis edges by Hartford, 5-4

By BRAD HALFOND
Collegian Correspondent

In their most competitive match to date, the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team ended its two game slide with a narrow 5-4 victory over Hartford.

"The team spirit was the highest I've ever seen it," said coach Mike Husted. "The team really wanted to win this one bad."

The match itself was decided during the second doubles. Up to that point both teams had split the other eight matches.

Shizuko Yamaski and Vanessa Kirchner were thrust into the spotlight as their pivotal match became the afternoon's center of attention.

Yamaski and Kirchner won the first set in a dramatic tiebreaker. They captured the tiebreaker with 10-8 score and then cruised to a 6-4 second set victory to assure the Minutewomen of the win.

"Those two played inspirational tennis and that is what clinched it for us," said Husted.

Other singles winners were no.3 Kere Edde (6-4,6-3) and no.4 Yamaski (6-3,6-2). Umass also registered two default wins on their way to the victory in Hartford.

On the losing side for UMass in singles play was no.1 Maura Foley (6-1,6-0), no.2 Gail Girasella (6-3,6-1) and no.5 Karen McShane lost a heartbreaking three setter 6-3, 5-7, 6-4. The other loss came at the expense of the no.1 doubles team Girasella and Edde (7-5,7-6).

"Our team had much more depth. And emotionally the girls were reallly keyed up," said a happy Mike Husted. The win puts the Minutewomen's record at 4-3 with three matches remaining.

Today UMass visits Providence to tangle with the powerhouse Friars. The key to winning this match will rest with the play of the top three singles players. If they can produce victories then the burden will be lighter on the rest of the squad.

TENNIS NOTES The mens tennis team will be looking to rebound from two successive defeats this weekend as they travel to Rutgers University for the Atlantic 10 Championships. The men need to place well in the A-10's to boost their sagging morale.

Minutewomen win two

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Toss Jen Miller a couple of game balls for her trophy case; the sophomore second baseman pushed aside a flu bug yesterday afternoon to key a sweep of visiting Boston College for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

Miller transformed the opening game from a 1-1 tie to a 4-1 win for the Minutewomen with a bases-loaded double in the bottom of the fifth inning, then she lent a little leather to the effort in the second half of the doubleheader to seal a 2-1 win.

UMass will take its newly improved 12-14 record into this afternoon's doubleheader with the University of Maine (17-19) beginning at 3 p.m. at Totman field, then head west to Adelphi for a pair more on Sunday. "When we needed to string some stuff together. . . we came through with the hits to win the ballgame," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino of her squad, which came from behind in both ends of yesterday's action. BC jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the third inning of the opening game, riding a couple of defensive gaffs and a key Stephanie Nardone single on the way.

But in the fifth, UMass loaded the bases with a single and a couple of crafty bunts. BC pitcher Lori Salvia — who pitched a couple of years back for UMass before taking her game up Chestnut Hill — walked Jen Pugliese to force in the game tying run, before Miller yanked a deep drive inside the left field foul line to empty the bases.

Springfield pounces on Minutemen, 6-2

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — If you look at a baseball player's statistics, you won't find any category that measures leadership.

But the ability to fire a team up when it needs it, or calm teammates down when that's what they need, is as important as the number of home runs he hits or his earned run average.

Yesterday, after seeing his team lose to Springfield College, 6-2, University of Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone was quick to point out the lack of leadership from his seniors.

UMass, 14-15, mustered just seven hits, two of them infield singles, against the Division II Chiefs.

"It wasn't just the hitting," Stone said. "It's a lack of leadership. We have no competitors among our seniors. I knew coming into the season that that might be a problem, and it has become a problem. We're sloppy and we don't have discipline."

That was evident in the four errors the Minutemen made in the field, which helped Springfield pull away from a 2-1 lead.

The Chiefs had just seven hits off three UMass pitchers, but managed to get four of them during a fifth-inning rally.

Paul Marchetti and Matt Maguire opened the inning with singles, and that was enough to chase UMass starter Rob Graziano. Jeff Richardson entered and intentionally walked Gavin Sheridan to load the bases.

Singles by Chris Lagos and Sam Gillen made it 4-1, and an error by Tom Murray and a bases loaded squeeze bunt put Springfield well on the way to improving to 17-9.

"Our success is a little bit of a surprise,"

Women's lax hosts no.2 Temple

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

If ever there was a time for the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team to catch a giant in a vulnerable position, it will be on Sunday.

The Gazelles just may be catching Temple University, the Brine Poll's No. 2 team in the nation (1 p.m., Totman Field), at the best possible time. This is a crucial point in the season for the Owls.

When Temple arrives in Amherst on Sunday it will be the third game in four days that the Owls will have played.

Two games and then one long day of traveling. The Owls should be nice and tired for a Gazelle team that also must play on Saturday.

But the Gazelles will have the luxury of sleeping in their own beds on Saturday night after playing Rutgers over at Totman (1 p.m. gametime).

"We're sitting in the same position we've been sitting in all year, the spoiler," UMass coach Patti Bossio said.

UMass has a chance to spoil a lot for the Owls who are tied for the No. 2 spot in the country with Harvard University. Temple was 8-1 before yesterday's game with Lafayette.

To make things even more interesting, the No. 1 team in the country, Penn State University lost to Princeton on Tuesday. Rankings have not been voted since that time and will not be until next week.

So the Owl's have a shot at the No. 1 ranking next weekend. But the Gazelles can spoil all of that. A good start may be key.

"Once the other team's ahead, they (UMass) feel more comfortable. It takes them a while to get going," Bossio said. "Throughout the season, they've played better in the second half."

Gorillas ready to march on Army

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team (8-1 and ranked eighth in the country) looks to keep its winning ways going when it travels to West Point, NY tomorrow for a battle with the United States Military Academy (4 p.m.).

In years past this has been a monumental game for the Gorillas. Twice in the last three years Army has gone overtime to beat UMass, with the Gorillas rebounding for a win in last year's contest, 13-10 at Boyden Field.

This season, the Cadets don't look to be quite as powerful, mustering only a 4-6 record to date. They've been embarassed by national powers like Cornell, Navy and Johns Hopkins, but were unbeaten at home before Wednesday's 13-6 loss to Yale.

Still, the tradition of the rivalry may be enough to spark a decent contest.

"They play a zone, ball control defense, because they're not quick enough to stay with you," UMass coach Dick Garber said of the Cadets. "They take you out of the running game."

Sound familiar? Dartmouth did the same thing Wednesday, forcing the Gorillas to overtime before succumbing, 11-10.

Leading the charge for Army is sophomore attack Tim deLoe, with 14 goals and 10 assists, followed by freshman Ed McGuire (13-6) and junior Scott Frank (10-4).

Minutewomen to race Northeastern/Brown

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team will travel to Boston to participate in a tri-meet with Northeastern University and Brown University this weekend.

Last weekend Northeastern easily won a quad-meet, which included an extremely tough team in Boston University, who surprisingly finished dead last.

Sherry Harris is NU's multi-talented throwing threat. Last weekend, she won all four of the throwing events.

UMass will counter primarily with Tina White in the hammer, Helen Balouras in the discus, Carla DeSantis in the javelin, and Simone Marisseau in the shot. Others providing quality depth are Diane Ozzolek in the hammer and the discus and Nancy Laurie in the jave, who are both very close to qualifying for the New Englands.

Head coach Julie LaFreniere said of Northeastern,

It has been out of the frying pan and into the fire for the University of Massachusetts men's track team this year. Tomorrow the men travel to Dedham to participate in a quad-meet with host Northeastern University, Brown University, and Southern Connecticut.

Brown was the 1989 Ivy League indoor runner-up to Dartmouth while Northeastern was the 1988 New England indoor champion, and remains quite a powerful team in '89. Southern Connecticut is no patty-cake team either. "The quality of our opponents is once again tough. We have no soft spots on our schedule," said head coach

Student protesters arraigned

Pre-trial date scheduled

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Seven students who were arrested Wednesday on charges of trespassing and disorderly conduct were arraigned in Hampshire District Court Friday.

University of Massachusetts students Frank E. Bowrys III, Loyda Guzman, Laura J. Morrisette, Diane Ditmore, Andrew J. Sirulnik and John S. Langford, and Hampshire College student Randolph L. Viscio appeared before Judge Salvatore Polito Friday morning. The case was continued to May 25 at 8:30 a.m. for a pre-trial conference.

Attorney Cristobal Bonifaz is representing the six UMass students free of charge. A court-appointed lawyer will represent Langford. Bonifaz said he advised Langford to apply for a public attorney so there would be two lawyers to work on the case.

The seven students were arrested Wednesday night after a six-hour occupation of a Microwave Remote Sensing Laboratory in the basement of Marcus Hall.

About 30 people ventured to the Hampshire District Court Friday with the two-fold purpose of showing support for the demonstrators being arraigned inside the courthouse and protesting military-funded research at UMass.

The protesters arrived to the front of courthouse at 8:30 a.m. waving banners and signs which said Keep mindless militerrorism out of the University and Stop the guns, fund the future to the early morning passersby on Main St.

"A bunch of my students were arrested, and I came here to support them," said Sandra Morgen, a professor of women's studies at UMass. "I think [military] research on campus is highly problematic."

"I'm impressed with the number of people who mobilized themselves to Northampton on a days notice and at such an early hour," said Jonathon Leavitt, a representative from People for a Socially Responsible University.

The protest against military-funded research is scheduled to continue today, with a rally at 12 p.m. at Whitmore. Viscio said he hopes that students from the Five College community, Boston and other colleges and universities in the region will participate in the rally.

Members of PSRU said they plan at today's rally to refuse the Department of Defense funding on campus, demand that the administration drop the charges against the students who were arrested, demand the administration declare opposition to the US support of the government in El Salvador and to stop police brutality.

NORTHAMPTON — A former University of Massachusetts basketball player was sentenced Thursday for breaking into an Amherst apartment on Amity Street in January.

Duane Chase was given a two-year sentence by Northampton District Court Judge Edward Shea. Shea chose to have Chase serve 90 days in jail and spend the remainder of the time on probation.

Chase said he is planning to appeal the sentence to a jury session of the Northampton District court.

Sen. petitions second CAG presidential election

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

An attempt to block the Commuter Area Governing Board's decision to hold a second presidential election this Thursday is underway, bolstered by claims that there is no proof of voting descrepancies or errors in the first election.

Undergraduate Student Sen. Bob McDevitt said yesterday he petitioned the Student Judiciary last week to halt plans for Thursday's elections and instead ratify Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes as Commuter Area Government co-presidents.

Nearly two weeks ago, Reilly and Zarganes defeated co-candidates Robb Smith and Ted Chambers by four votes, but the losing campaign immediately contested the results, claiming several voting descrepancies were grounds for a new election.

Elections coordinator Jennifer MacNeish said at least one vote was cast from the Greek area, who are not considered part of the CAG district. She added that election officials also discovered 13 write-in votes that were unable to be confirmed.

McDevitt said the board's decision to hold a new election was incorrect because the Smith/Chambers campaign failed to produce the names of the people who were allegedly ineligible to vote, meaning that there is no viable proof that these errors were made.

Instead of immediately voting to schedule a new election, McDevitt said the board should have postponed ratification of the new president until they investigated the validity of the charges.

If the charges were true, he added that the entire CAG election, including the vice-presidential and treasurer races, should have been invalidated.

"Either an election is a good election or it's bad. There's no gray," he said.

MacNeish said the CAGGB approved the scheduling of a new election because of past instances where "lesser" elections were invalidated because of dubious results.

The elections for vice-president and treasurer were not thrown out because they were uncontested, she said, adding that such action would further damage CAG's state of "disarray."

The names of those who incorrectly cast votes have not been released, but are proof that a new trial is necessary, she said, adding that the list is being stored in the Student Government Association office to prevent tampering by any party, she said.

Clerk of Courts Chris Mclellan said he will review the case today to determine the validity of McDevitt's petition.

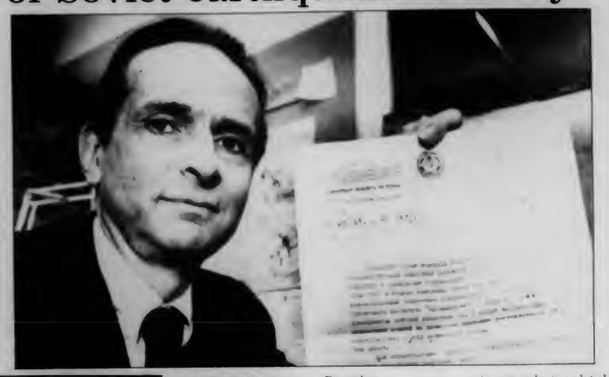
American to plan reconstruction of Soviet earthquake-torn city



CAMBRIDGE (AP) — An American expert in earthquake reconstruction said yesterday he had agreed to draft a master plan for Leninakan, one of the Soviet Armenian cities leveled by a quake last December.

Eduardo Lozano (pictured above holding contract with the Soviet Union), a former professor of urban planning at Harvard who had helped rebuild devastated cities in Peru and Nicaragua, said he worked out the agreement last week with officials in Moscow and Armenia, a Soviet republic.

"I wasn't sure it said exactly what it was supposed to say, because it's in Russian," he said of the document. "But as soon as I got back I took it over to be translated, and it turned out to be exactly what I thought."

Lozano, 52, said money for the planning and much of the reconstruction are being raised by Armenian relief agencies in the West.

He said his Cambridge-based architecture firm, Lozano White & Associates Inc., expects to spend about a year on the project, beginning in June with an aerial survey of Leninakan.

The city, which had 220,000 residents before two enormous tremors and several smaller ones toppled most of its buildings on Dec. 7, is half-destroyed buildings.

"The most haunting sight I'll never forget it was an old Byzantine church cut open, right in half, as if with a saw," Lozano said.

Because the quake struck in the middle of the day, many children were at school, and hundreds were left orphans, he said.

Smith fighting measles outbreak

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Health officials at Smith College are attempting this week to fend off the threat of a minor outbreak of measles on campus, claiming they are optimistic their efforts will prevent the virus from spreading.

Dr. Andrew Mackey, acting director of the Smith College Health Service, said during the past two weeks two measles cases have been confirmed. In addition, one person suffering from the virus' early symptoms is being quarantined until medics are able to identify the illness.

Mackey said early symptoms of the virus include nasal congestion, a persistent cough, and eye redness during the first two weeks of contact that later develops into a red, blotchy rash that covers the face and body of the infected person.

The virus is transmitted through "respiratory secretions," such as coughing, he said, adding that in rare cases, pneumonia or encephalitis, inflammation of the brain, is known to occur.

It is unlikely that the small outbreak will escalate into epidemic proportions, Mackey said, adding that the source of the virus is probably a student who was infected during a Spring Break trip to New Mexico.

People who have not been immunized since they were 12 to 15 months old should be wary of exposure to measles and seek medical attention if they develop symptoms after being exposed to an infected person, he said.

Those who are over 30 years of age or have been immunized will probably not be infected, but should exercise caution because the vaccine is not absolute, Mackey said.

Future election credibility shaken by current process

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Years from now, when University of Massachusetts student politicians look at how campus elections were run in the late 1980s, they will probably react in one of two ways.

News Analysis

They will either adopt the all-negative campaign style of this year's Commuter Area Government presidential election, or they will find that style brutish, child-like and irresponsible.

Laugh hard when you hear this: The Commuter Area Government presidential election. Originally scheduled to coincide with the March Student Government Association elections, the CAG election was "postponed" until April 11.

Robb Smith and Ted Chambers were on one ticket, and Alex Zarganes and Tim Reilly were on the other. Meanwhile, lurking in the shadows of the Brittany Manor, Southwood and other sundry apartment complexes were several unknowns. These unknowns, SGA Sens. W. Greg Rothman, Brian Darling and Bob McDevitt, and others, allegedly plastered the apartments with posters laden with false accusations about Smith and Chambers.

The posters and the posterers

The posters, which both sets of candidates, other Commuter Area Senators and the Union Program Council all called "blatant lies," may have played into the four-vote Zarganes/Reilly victory. They accused Smith and Chambers of stealing CAG funds and giving some of the funds to the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance, thus preventing the scheduled May 7 UPC Pond Concert.

Rothman, Darling and McDevitt have denied placing or producing the posters, but several senators told the Collegian the three were seen separately with or near posters during the week before the election.

However, former SGA presidential candidate Josh Gordon refused to deny his involvement in the ongoing postering. He told the Collegian last week that he received, and then distributed negative posters to friends in the Hatch and in class.

One wonders how many friends Gordon has. Gordon's "eye-for-an-eye" style has made him Mr. Unpopular in many circles, although Rothman appears to have taken him under his wing, said an SGA insider.

Gordon said the reason he handed out posters was "payback for the Liberator," the one-time campus newspaper Smith and Chambers helped produce that Gordon claims "slandered" him during his presidential campaign last month.

Yes, Josh, two wrongs do make a right at UMass.

The "slander" in question includes three quotes in the newspaper's "Quotables" section. The first quote, attributed to Gordon, makes no sense to this or many other readers the Collegian asked. The other quotes, both reading, "Politically, I think he's slime," don't seem slanderous considering Gordon's recent actions.

The CAG election: Round Two

Smith and Chambers, citing negative campaigning and some "questionable" votes by non-commuters, protested the election to CAG Election Coordinator Jennifer MacNeish, who granted their wish and called for another election, scheduled for this Thursday.

MacNeish and the 15-member CAG Governing Board may have been correct in calling for the new election, but at least they cited the questionable votes, rather than negative campaigning as the main reason for the new election.

However, McDevitt and others have questioned the Board, claiming bias in the decision based on very little "evidence."

But there will be another election, and before anyone had much of a chance to campaign, posterers, Gordon allegedly included, plastered apartments with: "WAAAHHHH!!! We want a new election.

Ordering out: Saving graces of latenight delivery

Domino's Pizza on Route 9 is one of the many food businesses in the area that offer late-night hours and free delivery.

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

First in a 10-part series on life at the University of Massachusetts

It's 1 a.m. on a Saturday. You and your friends have just returned from bar-hopping in Northampton. You're all starving, but you have no food, and no desire to find an all-night convenience store. So what do you do?

You call for pizza, of course.

Ursula Askins, a senior Spanish major at the University of Massachusetts, has been helping students battle munchie attacks for the past three years as a driver for Andy's Super Pizza in Amherst. She's just one of dozens of UMass students driving at all hours of the night for local pizza, chicken and sub shops in the area.

"It's late hours," Askins said. "But if you like to drive, and don't mind dealing with the public in various states of intoxication, then it's the job for you."

Askins said she started working as a driver for Andy's the summer before her sophomore year at UMass, then decided to stay on in the fall.

"I didn't expect I would enjoy it as much as I do," she said. "I get to meet a lot of neat people."

People who see her on campus say, "Hey, you're the pizza lady," she said.

Askins said she works a lot of night shifts, from 4 p.m. to 2 a.m. on weeknights and until 3 a.m. on the weekends.

She said her friends always ask her if working alone that late at night scares her.

"I always say no," she said. "I can handle myself, and I think people realize that [when I'm delivering pizza]."

"Going into frats late at night is scary," Askins added, "But I never feel like I'm in danger. Most people know their bounds, and know there will be consequences for their actions, like never getting a pizza delivered again."

However, Askins said she did have a minor problem once, when a student attacked her as she delivered a pizza to a residence hall in Southwest.

"A guy grabbed the pizza," she said. "But I chased him to James House [in Southwest], cornered him, and made him the give the pizza back."

Askins said she has had several funny experiences while delivering pizza as well.

"I delivered [pizza] to a room where people were stoned," she said. "They had to gather all their pennies to pay. They told me not to remember the room, so of course I did."

Askins said she once had to deliver pizza in the middle of a "huge snowstorm."

"It was to a guy named Ken, who was from Kenya," Askins said. "He was very apologetic [about the snow]. I told him I liked the bracelet he was wearing, so he gave it to me as a tip. That's the nicest thing any of the people I've delivered to has done."

Askins said people are not always as generous about tipping, especially around the end of the semester. A good tip for UMass students is to tip around a dollar, although the average is below that. In any case, Askins said the tips are better here than in her hometown of Concord, N.H.

"Smokers are usually generous," Askins said. "If you do them a favor like picking up cigarettes."

Askins said the busiest times are "around dinner time, if something's bad at the DC," she said, and "around 10 p.m. when people get the munchies."

"And around finals time," she added.

Askins said the public is generally understanding if a pizza is late.

"Most [students] have probably worked in some kind of fast food place before, and know what it's like dealing with the public," she said.

Askins said the biggest problem she faces is being late because the last person she delivered to was late to meet her.

"It's a chain reaction," she said. "People think, 'Last time, the driver was late, so I'll go down a couple of minutes later.' Then I'm late for the rest of the rounds."

be sentenced to six months in the Hampshire County House of Correction with the rest of the time on probation. Judge Shea chose the longer sentence.

Earlier in the month, Chase submitted to sufficient facts to breaking and entering with the intent to commit a felony and receiving stolen property, according to Friday's Daily Hampshire Gazette. His lawyer, Meade Burrows of Northampton, requested that sentencing be delayed.

"Chase is not a criminal and he's not a thief. He made a very big mistake, which he paid for dearly," Burrows said, asking the judge to be lenient with sentencing Chase. "He is basically a sweet, good natured kid who, when in the wrong element, is led astray. When in the right element, he prospers and does well."

Early in the morning of Jan. 3, Chase, David Brown, who was sentenced on April 6 to one year in jail and one year on probation, and basketball recruit George Hardin were stopped by police for operating a vehicle without illuminating their headlights and driving in the wrong direction on a one-way street.

Police found burglary tools and what was later found to be a stolen microwave oven and stereo in the car.

Chase and Brown were suspended from the basketball team by coach John Calipari, but Hardin, allegedly only a passenger in the car, was allowed to play in the last seven games of the season.

Which brings you up to date. The University is beset with conservative [or non-conservatives that denounce the LBGA] posterers who can't spell and can't stand the sight of a Smith/Chambers victory.

In any case, UMass has on its hands a campaign where mudslinging is more important than making points, and irresponsibility comes before issues. No matter who wins the Commuter Area Government presidency, the election process at this University has reached its nadir.

Earth Day observed in Amherst

By TOM CIAMPI
Collegian Staff

Environmental activists and concerned citizens braved Mother Nature's high winds and brisk temperatures Saturday to commemorate Earth Day on the Amherst Town Common.

Earth Day, which was first held in 1970, "brings together people that have concerns about the environment with people that are doing things within the environmental movement," according to Leslie Giffen, organizer of the event.

Political action and environmental education groups, along with other groups advocating alternative technology, lined the common with tables, speaking with area residents and among themselves. Each group offered literature and information about their respective concerns and agendas.

Throughout the day, local artists sang, danced, told stories, read poems, and performed music that complemented the theme of Earth Day.

According to Giffen, different groups were invited to Earth Day to encourage an exchange of thoughts and ideas.

"We're all coming from different places, so we all need to get in touch with each other, because we're all working toward the same end — to stop environmental degradation and reverse it where we can," Giffen said.

Rep. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst) spoke about the Greenhouse Effect and ozone layer depletion, and told the 100 people present of legislation pending that would phase out the use of chloro-flourocarbons (CFCs) in Massachusetts in the 1990s.

Daniel Newell, an Earth Day coordinator, said the event "informs people about particular environmental problems and informs them about ecologically sound alternatives to their current ways of living."

The environmental group Greenpeace was one of over 30 groups that participated in Earth Day. The group asked passers-by to sign petitions, two of which called for a moratorium on nuclear weapons testing and the enforcement of a treaty prohibiting industrialized nations from oil and mineral development in Antartica.

The Massachusetts Rainforest Action Group staged a rally at the end of the day in support of Malaysian tribespeople and against Japan. The group alleges that Malaysians have been arrested while attempting to prevent the destruction of their rainforest homelands. They also claim that Japan is the major exporter of Malaysian hardwood.

The 15 members present urged the audience to write to world leaders and express their concern.

Multicultural Seder celebrated

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

More than 60 students and staff from different ethnic backgrounds gathered in Memorial Hall last night for a multicultural Seder.

The Seder, a traditional ceremony of Passover, the Jewish festival of freedom, was co-sponsored by Hillel and the Third World Caucus.

Alison Buckholtz, an organizer of the event, said that while the historical Seder specifically commemorates 430 years of Jewish slavery in Pharoah's Egypt, it is also a reminder "of the experiences of all other oppressed peoples.

"This self-identification with the past stirs in us an appreciation of the freedom that is ours, and an empathy with the plight of our brothers and sisters who still dwell under the shadow of modern day Pharoahs," she said.

Hillel President Alisa Berkowitz set aside an empty chair at the table to "represent all victims of religious and cultural oppression who can't be here in freedom."

The Haggadah, the text of the Seder, was compiled from contributions from the UMass community. Groups in attendance read an appropriate piece regarding their struggles as a reminder "of the indestructible links that exist between all those peoples who are touched by oppression."

Specific references were made during the Seder to current worldwide human rights violations, historical injustices, sexism, racism, homophobia, economic inequity, the destruction of the environment, and the threat of nuclear war.

Participating in the seder were representatives from Afrik-Am, the Asian-American Student Association, Ebony Productions, the Everywoman's Center, Hillel, the International Student Association, the Korean Students Association, the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance, the National Society of Black Engineers, Nummo News, the Pan African Students Association and the South Asian Student Association.

Adam Stein of the Third World Caucus, said a coalition of "historically oppressed and underrepresented" RSO's will grow out of the Seder "to act as one in the face of oppressive incidents on campus."

QUESTION: I've heard men should do testicular exam regularly. Why should they do this and how is it done?

ANSWER: A testicular exam is a self examination of the testes in order to detect the first signs of testicular cancer. Surprisingly, testicular cancer is one of the most common cancers in men 15 to 34 years old. It accounts for 12 percent of all cancer deaths in this group. Early detection and prompt medical attention are the key factors in treating testicular cancer effectively.

The testicular exam is easily done and only takes about three minutes. It should be performed at least once a month, if not more. The best time to do the exam is after a warm bath or shower when the skin covering the testes (scrotum) is most relaxed. Start the exam by rolling each testicle gently between the thumb and fingers of both hands. Thoroughly check each testicle looking for any hard lumps or nodules, swelling (enlargement), or a change in these symptoms you should see a doctor promptly for a diagnosis. Most importantly, many of these symptoms will only be noticeable if you do the examination regularly in order to establish what feels normal for you.

QUESTION: Do men and women really enjoy giving oral sex, or do they do it just to please their partner?

ANSWER: Some men and women enjoy oral sex and some do not. Since it is a personal preference, it could be something that you and your partner should talk about. Talking about oral sex (and other issues of sexuality) can be important in learning about your partners feelings. Why don't you ask them how they feel? Also, think about how you feel and be ready to answer your own question.

"A lot of the population was housed in pre-cast concrete apartment buildings that crumbled like matchsticks," he said. "I knew they were bad, but until you see them, you don't know how bad. They were instant concrete graves."

Soviet officials have estimated that the quake killed 40,000 to 55,000 people in the cities of Leninakan, Spitak and Kirovakan and in up to 100 villages.

Lozano said he plans to bring Soviet architects to Cambridge in late summer for training in urban planning, computer-aided design and methods of making buildings resistant to earthquakes.

He said his master plan will call for reconstructing the 75-to 150-year-old stone buildings in the city's center, which withstood the quake much better than the newer apartment blocks on the outskirts.

He said he would like to see a new city hub built north of the city, with athletic facilities, schools and shops.

Instead of large orphanages, Lozano said he will call for dozens of small group homes linked to schools.

"Those kids should not be in an institution, and they should not be torn from their roots and sent to other cities," he said.

A native of Argentina, Lozano came to the United States in 1962 to study architecture and urban design. After receiving a doctorate from Harvard, he taught at Harvard and Princeton universities and then founded Lozano White & Associates with partner Lindsay White in 1974.

The firm, which has 20 employees, planned the reconstruction of a university campus outside of Lima, Peru, and drafted a master plan for Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, after it was hit by a huge quake in 1972.

Join the party at the Tower

The place was hoppin'. I could barely find a seat, it was sooo crowded in that basement. And the band and keg hadn't even arrived! I mean, the crowd was staggering — people standing, groping one another with all the tact of Sam Kinison, chatting, whispering, gum-cracking, bubble blowing, belly-laughing, reminiscing about the last time they were here ("Oh, was it last night? Seems like last week!"), and who they met — "She said she'd meet me here, yeah, in the seat you're in."

Alise Harfield

I was glad they weren't talking to me! I wouldn't have heard anyway — my nose was attached to the Oxford English Dictionary.

Oh, yeah. I didn't mention this party was at the Tower — the Tower Library basement.

Or hadn't you noticed it has become the choice place to go on those off-nights when the Pub and Time Out are less crowded. (This is what I'm told by those overagers who get to go to town.) But I have news for them! The Tower is just as wild.

Check out these attractions: no cover, no bouncers (unless you count the two librarians who expertise is in reference materials), choice location, 26 — count them — 26 floors to choose from, free water, restrooms on every third floor (real partiers stay on those), big tables, unlimited chairs, great views (have you looked down from the 26th lately?) — the list goes on and on.

If you love to bother others (who have the gall to study) by whispering and giggling, this is your element! You've invariably seen me there: I'm the geek with the gritted teeth, gripping mounds of crumpled papers, flashing dirty looks, writing papers.

My usual night is Thursday. My entrance never varies: bang the head on the revolving door, hip check the turnstile of my choice, laugh at the idiot abusing the "up" button of the elevator, then hop downstairs to the basement where I wave to the two blank-faced librarians. If they like me, maybe they'll "shush" the noisemakers or give them a detention. Oh, yeah. This is college not high school.

I spread my jacket, knapsack, and can of VeryFine as far as they will go atop the four seater near the restroom. A choice table; I'm happy. So far, so good.

A few minutes pass. Loners walk by, peer at the three spaces at my table, then decide (upon looking at my friendly, welcoming face) to join me. Their knapsacks loom above the table, waiting until my belongings get thrown on the floor, then they are slammed down without grace, their zippers torn apart, notebooks, pencils, slide rules, thesauri falling out helplessly onto the table. The table I found. Wads of pink bubblegum brush against the tip of my nose, then POOF! are popped in my face. I look up from the Oxford, set my magnifying glass aside. Sure, they've disrupted my thesis, but now that they're settled down, we can all get to work.

Then the whispers start. Minutes later they're invariably joined by a friend who has spent the last hour talking to the guy who jumped out of the quarter keg last night at Wanda's surprise party. I get to hear all about it. Free gossip, without even evesdropping one bit. How lucky I am! And I came here to do a paper? Maybe I should try the Pub . . .

Lies run rampant

The remarks of commuter Area Government presidential candidate Ted Chambers and other leaders of the United Students' Agenda, in regard to the false aspersion that were woven into the recent elections, are hypocritical and almost ludicrous. True, the use of fictitious innuendos in campaigns is a tasteless and malevolent manner in which to run an election. However, remember the cliche, "he who lives by the sword, dies by the sword." During the Student Government Association presidential elections, U.S.A. blatantly lied about their opponents through the use of a poster crusade of fallacies.

Presidential candidate Guy Glodis was falsely accused of being a racist, that he would not appoint minorities to campus positions, and that he worked for Amherst towing. Yet while all the other campaigns were riddled with accusations of illegal funding and questionable tactics, not once was the Glodis campaign questioned in regard of ethical behavior.

Josh Gordon was also on the end of vicious personal attacks, all fabricated in the workshop of the U.S.A. followers with the aid of the Liberator, a paper written by a group of corrupt zealots. Again, I don't condone running a negative campaign, but U.S.A. along with the agitated co-candidates should remember that when one plays with fire, one usually gets burnt.

Micheal G. T. Bakas
Central

The truth hurts

How very sick the negative campaigning by Smith/Chambers opponents; so confused is the "justification" of such tactics by the former presidential candidate who believes negative campaigning did him in. Is it not true that this person had problems describing his political orientation to people during his campaign? He told liberals he was a liberal, he told conservatives he was a conservative, and was laughed at by both groups. Is it not true he threatened one of his opponents? Is it not true that violence was initiated by the candidate, who now has been distributing lies among is friends about Smith/Chambers?

No one ever lied about him. He was defeated by the revelation of facts relative to his campaign. Yet he lies about someone and claims it was justified. Never was concert money diverted to the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance. This is fact. It is a fact that $8000 was invested in springtime concerts. This negative campaign against Smith/Chambers should stand revealed for what it is. It is a homophobic campaign perpetrated by people who do not like to see the truth printed about them.

No place for police torture

On April 19, seven student protesters were arrested at a University of Massachusetts at the Amherst weapons research laboratory. Putting aside for a moment the moral issue of electronic and biological weapons research at the university, I would like to discuss the issue of police conduct.

Andrew Sirulnik

It is important to understand that when the student protestors occupied the weapons research laboratory, they stated to the police their intent to commit an act of strictly nonviolent and civil disobedience that would be non-destructive of property — by their physical presence the student protestors were halting weapons research.

At about 2:00 p.m., Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson announced to the approximately 30 protestors and reporters that arrest was imminent and that all reporters and protestors who didn't want to be arrested must leave. After the room had been cleared of all but nine protestors and nine policemen, Mr. Hilson told the protestors that they would have to wait for someone from the Dean of Students office to arrive and recite relevant passages from the University Code of Conduct prior to arrest.

30 minutes later, when this was finally accomplished, Mr. Hilson ordered a mock arrest. Police surrounded the group as a police video camera was swiftly moved into position. Mr. Hilson then stepped into the middle of the anxious group of protestors and said, in a disinterested tone, that he and other university officials had decided not to arrest them, and that they were being let off easy just this once, expecting the group to utter a muffled sigh of relief, shrug their shoulders, and leave the building. None of the protesters left.

Inside, the students were confined by police to a small area of the lab. They were not permitted to use a toilet, and women and men alike wee forced to urinate in a wastebasket while the all male contingent of police were present. A police officer told one protestor that he hoped that he would make a false move, so that he would have an opportunity to beat him.

Mr. Hilson returned at 6:00 pm and said that the Chancellor had changed his mind and the students were to be arrested immediately. He finally allowed water to be delivered, which had been provided by other protestors and not by Mr. Hilson as some reports read. Mr. Hilson's announcement of probable disciplinary suspension from the university convinced one more protestor to leave, and the arrests began.

While none of the protestors offered any active resistance to being removed, those who did not offer to walk out voluntarily were intentionally subjected to the severe pain of being dragged by their wrists, which were handcuffed behind their backs and forcefully twisted. One man was targeted for special treatment by a device that is specifically designed to cause one's handcuffs to imbed in the ulnar nerve, inflicting excruciating pain.

As he was being dragged out of the building, that protestor's screams were not of indignation or anger, but of physical received agony. At least one newspaper reported that protestors received medical care for "soreness." The young woman who was carried by one arm while both were handcuffed behind her back, and who now has one of her arms splinted and one in a sling, would use other words to describe her injuries.

After the protestors who were treated at the University Health Services were returned to the University Police Station, all seven were released.

The university is an institution of higher learning, and not a seething inner-city district. While I met several University police who acted sincerely and with decorum, many were blatantly cruel. Physical and psychological torture by police, as well as research on developing a more efficient technology of death by scientists, have no place at the University of Massachusetts, and should be actively challenged by all who are blessed with a conscience.

Andrew Sirulnik is a UMass student who was involved in Wednesday's demonstration. All of the protestors contributed to this column.

McCarthy no Republican

Pamela, Pamela, Pamela, I'm quite sure that your parents couldn't handle their lovely daughter's politics ("Reacting to reactionaries," April 20). I have been a Republican for six years now and I have attended conventions as a delegate, held statewide positions with Teenage Republicans, College Republicans, and Young Republicans, and even received a salary from the Republican National Committee, as well as the Pennsylvania Republican State Committee. Guess what honey, I know what a Republican is, and they are not all alike. The Republican Party has just as many factions and individual interests as the Democratic Party.

But, let's define conservatives. Pornography, we've asserted, should not be sold by the state. Since the university is state-run, it should follow that the store should not sell smut. Not that you care about morality or smut, (I've read your high school year book). HA, HA, the Minuteman is against Christmas caroling. Oh yeah, well we are not against Christmas, Christians, or Christianity. Can you say the same for yourself?

For Pamela McCarthy (no relation to Uncle Joe) to criticize the Republicans for throwing "temper tantrums" is like Pete Rose attacking gamblers. Come on. Pamela, your columns are always whining cranky temper tantrums about whatever ridiculous and irrelevant cause you've stumbled across in between your soap operas.

I am a conservative. I am a Republican. I'm not a journalist. But I've grown up with them. Pamela McCarthy is no journalist, she's just an angry and frustrated liberal. Perhaps she should listen to her parents.

W. Greg Rothman
Amherst

Republican Club needed

Pamela McCarthy's column ("Reacting to reactionaries," April 20) was a vicious and an unprovoked attack on the Republican Club.

The Republican Club is the only conservative organization on campus. It is the only outlet for the conservative student to voice his/her opinion. This campus is full of left-wing organizations that seem to think they own the university.

The Republican Club is very vocal and sometimes controversial, but it is truly needed on a campus that has an administration that will not accept the fact that everyone on this campus does not have the same twisted, evil ideology as they do.

People like W. Greg Rothman and Ted Maravelias are working hard so that the conservative student has a place on this campus. If they indeed compromise their position, then the conservative movement on this campus will die and this campus will become a liberals' asylum used to spread their ideology.

You may not agree with their ideology but you must admire their persistence and their commitment to the cause.

No apologies, no compromise, and no excuses. "Extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice."

R.e.s.p.e.c.t, find out what it means to Bones

By JASON TALERMAN
Collegian Staff

One nation baby, of the Bone Cow variety. This is it. Here it is. My column is fusing with the people. This is as close as I'm ever going to come to intercourse with my readership. The much awaited new format is now at hand. Your questions, my answers, no bullshit. It is the science of Bones.

"Is respect a moral issue?"—C. Fingerwood, Northampton

BONES

Hey, the more subjective, the better. I've got the floor. I have two feet down, solid, and a week of research behind me, so bend an ear.

Answers are tough to find for something as subjective as morality. I figured the best place to find firm info would be with the pre-war Germans. Prideful mofos like Freud and Hitler knew the importance of respect and went to great page lengths to express their absolute convictions. It turns out though, that everything this sordid lot wrote was so riddled with a myriad of psychoses, that I felt better answers could be served up at such bastions of critical thought as the Bellvue Mental Fitness Ward. By his end Freud had decided that all answers to all questions were rooted within the female genitalia. Somebody definitely had cut his heroin with rat poison one too many times. Rumor has it that Hitler never got laid. The little bastard was so goddamn skittish around women that he couldn't possibly be qualified to comment on respect. Eva Braun was 30 feet tall next to Adolph. She scared the living crap out of him.

Clearly, I would not find my answer among the Germans. I turned to the 19th century French for inspiration. For one they got better smack than most. Four or five them together in a dark wood panelled room sipping thick, viscous absenthe, pure liquid opium. Baudelaire, Huysmans, Gide,... the horse dragged them all down early but they shined bright while they lasted. They couldn't stand the sun for more than 15 minutes at a time. They travelled at night and wrote during the day. Sleep was not a high perogative. In 1860 Gustave Flaubert wrote to de Maupaussant, "What is beautiful is moral, that is all there is to it."

Bearing that in mind, I jump ahead a century or so to Apocolypse Now, a source that has yet to fail me, no matter what the argument. I'll set the scene. Marlon Brando is facing his certain end at the hands of Martin Sheen. Sheen is faltering at this point. He's already been driven half mad by the river and now he's got to excute a man he clearly holds in all consuming awe. Keeping Flaubert's words in mind we can definitely separate morality from the chaos that Brando's Col. Kurtz has created. There's not too much beauty in Kurtz's world. Those who have betrayed him are hanging from the trees. Giant bovines are sliced in half with mighty native blows, all in the honor of Kurtz. Hitler should be so lucky. Yesiree, respect abounds in Brando's Cambodian nightmare but with the lack of apparent beauty, it's hard to place morality (unless you consider the exposed chest cavity an object de art).

To further drive a stake between respect and morality Brando warns Sheen just prior to execution, "You have the right to kill me but you don't have the right to judge me." Pretty heady stuff considering Sheen was about spill the Colonel's brains all over the malaria infested bamboo compound. In effect what Kurtz is doing with his statement is splitting morality and respect into mental and physical categories. The lack of morality in Kurtz's world will allow him to accept the physical; a bludgeoning at the hands of Sheen. The mental giant in the crazed Colonel is going to force Sheen to cognitively respect him while in the very act of execution. Indeed his own execution sealed respect for Kurtz, just moments before the air strike, a gratuitous moral verdict based totally on physicality. You betcha, respect and morality, different as night and day.

Bones is empty without you. Send questions to J. Talerman, Collegian, 113 Campus Center, ASAP.

Elvis gets the royal switch from soft boy Hytch

Queen Elvis
Robyn Hitchcock 'n' the Egyptians

Blaze of Glory
Joe Jackson
A&M
Ten of a Kind
RCA

Listening to Robyn Hitchcock is the equivalent to journeying into the surreal. Trying to understand what he is talking about is more fun than listening to the songs themselves. Therefore, his latest effort, Queen Elvis, is sure to provide hours, if not years, of enjoyment.

It all begins when you pull out the record sleeve (yes, some of us still buy lps) and are faced with a story about death and the afterworld. Or maybe it's not about that, I can't be sure.

Then the music begins and, as usual, the album is full of mystical, quirky, and often humorous tunes. In "The Devil's Coachman," Hitchcock sees the devil not only when he looks in the mirror, but also when he looks in his scrambled eggs. And "Superman" is nothing more than a crunchy little man he found in a box of corn flakes.

But it's the music that makes this Hitchcock's best album since Fegmania!. He covers everything from the dreamy "Madonna of the Wasps" and "Swirling," to the carnival sounding "The Devil's Coachman," to the driving "Freeze" and the whiny, hypnotic "Superman".

The stand out is "One Long Pair of Eyes," a beautifully melodic, totally incomprehensible love song as only Hitchcock could write it.

RECORD REVIEW

Joe Jackson, whose musical career has spanned from the ska sounding Look Sharp, to the swinging jazz of Jumpin' Jive, to the Latin intrumental Will Power, has covered even more musical territory than Hitchcock. So when Jackson calls his latest album, Blaze of Glory, "a synthesis of everything that I've done," you would expect it to sound like a muddled hodge-podge, which, at first listen, it is. But with each additional listen, the intricacies, themes, and musical styles all blend perfectly to form a very well crafted album about what it is like for a rocker to grow old.

Some things don't work, such as the string filled ballad "Sentimental Thing," (in which Drew Barfield sings lead) the Chaka Khan sounding "Discipline," and the obnoxious, bubble-gum voice of female singer Joy Askew, who shares vocals with Jackson on many cuts.

The rest of the album is a gem. The Latin instrumental, "Acropolis Now," leads into the slow burning "Blaze of Glory," which concerns the death of a pop star. The song starts acoustically and slowly builds. The same is true of "The Human Touch," which reaches an emotional peak similar to that of the classic "A Slow Song," on Night and Day.

The album rocks with the likes of "Tomorrow's World" and "Rant and Rave," but also includes ballads, such as "The Best I Can Do" which sounds as if it came right out of Body and Soul, and the acoustic "Evil Empire," which could very well be a Big World outtake.

There's something on this album for every Joe Jackson fan. And for those of you who have liked everything this man has done, you may consider it his crowning achievement.

A much more uneven album is Ten of a Kind. It is a compilation album of the ten best unsigned bands in America according to CMJ. Aside from that, these bands have nothing in common. The music ranges from the sugary shlock of Lablanc's "Turn to Me," to the pop metal of Kid Crash's "Contact".

Kid Crash is one of four Boston bands on the album. The others are the Titanics ("Clowntown"), Lazy Susan ("Faith has Another"), and Circle Sky ("When the Life that I Lead Doesn't Lead Anywhere"). The Titanics sound exactly like Del Fuegos. Lazy Susan is a harmonizing female folk duo that you could probably catch playing in the streets of Harvard Square. (That's not an insult. You could catch Tracy Chapman there just three years ago.) Cicle Sky is an intelligent pop band that may make it big in the college scene, but will never make it to top 40. (That's a compliment.)

But the best band reigns from Chicago. They are Material Issue and, if "Valarie Loves Me" is any indication of their talent, they are a name you will hear a lot from in the future. Disregard the geeky picture of the band on motorcycles on the back cover, these guys are for real. The song is a driving, melodic tune with clever lyrics. And when lead singer Jim Ellison screams out "Valarie loves me," you believe him.

You may not want to buy Ten of a Kind, but when the first Material Issue album is released, run out and get it.

Andy Warhol: Pop Art as Def-con, icon, con!

By BRYAN HOUSE
Collegian Correspondent

NEW YORK - Andy Warhol: A Retrostpective, at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City is the first full-scale exhibition of one of the best known artists of the last 30 years. The exhibition spans Warhol's entire career from early designs of the fifties to his last paintings of the eighties, including many works that have never been shown before.

Most of the early works revolved around advertisements, cartoons, and newspapers, culminating in his "Campbell's Soup Cans" (1962) and "210 Coke Bottles" (1962). Warhol made famous the use of "serial imagery", a group of artworks conceived as a series or the repeated or sequential use of similar or identical units within a single artwork. His first works that were products of this style, "S & H Green Stamps," (1962) and "192 One-dollar Bills", (1962) set the stage for some of his most famous works.

Warhol's familiar images were products of modern culture, images derived from television or newspapers that, once on canvas, were isolated and treated as objects. His Marilyn Monroe portraits, "The Six Marilyns (Marilyn Six Pack)" and "Marilyn X 100", both from 1962, took her most famous feature, her face, and presented it in serial fashion, retaining her striking beauty, but presenting her as she really was, a marketable commodity. He was obsessed with stars, Marilyn, Elvis, because they were the embodiment of glamour and fame, but also tragic figures who were destroyed by their much-envied superstardom.

However, what interested me most was Warhol's obsession with death and destruction. Warhol's pictures of car crashes, racist violence, electric chairs and atomic bombs presented products of modern culture in ominous, deadly ways. "White Car Burning III," (1963), presents a car demolished and in flames, upside down in front of its driver. The driver is impaled on a spike, hanging from a telephone pole, looking down on the wreckage. The person is a Christ-figure, perishing over the car, a representation of modern industrial society. The morbidity of the pictures leaves you numb, wondering what all this death means.

The best of the series, and the most powerful was "Atomic Bomb (in red)" (1965) which has five clear prints of a mushroom cloud across the top. In each row down, the number of prints increases and the prints become darker and less well-defined. The bottom row is almost completely black and shows only sparse details of actual clouds, symbolizing the totally destructive nature of the bomb and of mankind, its creator.

The exhibition has many of his later works which he began in 1972 after his retirement from painting in 1965. Featured were his Mao portraits (and wallpaper), celebrity portraits, his reversal series, skulls, oxidation paintings, camouflage paintings and his religious paintings. A devout Catholic, Warhol painted his own "Last Supper" in 1986. A huge black and white stencil of Michelangelo's "Last Supper, 10' X 22', it has big GE and Dove logos printed on it and a big 59c price-tag in the corner.

Warhol's art focused on the visible aspects of contemporary American life, reflecting what was often disregarded or ignored, and illuminating what was not yet commonly perceived. Andy Warhol: A Retrospective presents a complete picture of this anonymous man whose art was much more important than he would ever admit.

"If you want to know all about Andy Warhol, just look at the surface: of my painitng and films and me, and there I am. There's nothing behind it."

The exhibit runs until May 6.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

It was the same story in Saturday's second game, when Rutgers pounded out 16 hits on the way to a 16-3 win.

In the first game, UMass had ridden Paul Ciaglo's left arm to a 9-5 win to open the series.

Ciaglo threw 170 pitches in gusty weather that included a snow squall, and improved to 5-1. The junior allowed seven hits, striking out eight while walking eight.

Also, it must be remembered that teams get up for UMass, especially the ones that aren't among the nation's elite. Army coach Jack Emmer was able to draw up a strategic battle plan similar to the one employed by Dartmouth, one that clogged the crease with a zone defense and stressed a controlled passing game on the other end.

"That zone really forced some bad passes. We were forcing the ball and we weren't connecting," Garber said.

When the Gorillas (9-1) finally did get going, things began to take shape. After a frustrating first three quarters that saw UMass playing right into the Cadets' laps, the fort collapsed on the home front. Junior attack Rob Codignotto took a feed near the right post and beat goalie Rob Salter just 27 seconds into the final frame to put UMass up for good, 7-6.

To that point goals had been coming sporadically for the Gorillas, but sophomore Jim McAleavey got the next one at 1:48, dodging a defender near the left post and then flipping an over-the-shoulder beaut past a stunned Salter. It was the first lead of more than a goal for the Gorillas in the game.

Senior Paul Ganci got the final UM tally at 4:16 on a cut across the crease from Chris Tyler. Army's Tim deLoe (four goals) finished the scoring late for the final margin.

There was little doubt from the start this would be another interesting contest for the Gorillas. They dug themselves a huge foxhole to climb out of, as the Cadets rattled home their first three shots to go up, 3-0 just 4:28 into the game.

Garber called time out to talks things over, but sometimes all it takes is a little break to shake the cobwebs. UMass got that as junior Scott Hiller stole an errant pass behind the net intended for Salter, and curled out to find a wide-open cage.

That was the jump start they needed, as successive goals by McAleavey, Greg Collins and Hiller gave the Gorillas the lead, 4-3. Army drew to a 4-4 tie after one, and the score was knotted at each stop (5-5 at the half) before UMass put it away in the fourth.

Gorilla Grumblings: Among those in attendance was senior co-captain Chris Zusi, who had reconstructive surgery performed on his knee at a New York hospital last week. Zusi watched from a wheelchair on the sidelines . . . UMass has won two straight, the first time that it has won back-to-back games against the Cadets. Army still leads the series, 7-5.

Once again, there was a sizable UMass traveling contingent on hand was equal to the Army crowd . . . In the latest national stats released by the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association (through eight games), McAleavey would be second in assists at 4.0 (32 in eight games), and third in points at 5.875. Sal LoCascio's .645 save percentage is good for ninth.

The bats have warmed a bit as well. Though mental blunders undermined Friday's offensive outburst ("we snuffed our own fire. . . it was ugly," said Sortino), the Minutewomen circled the bases efficiently yesterday, to the tune of six runs.

UMass took its irretractable 3-0 lead in the fourth inning of yesterday's opener, as both Aprile and Chris Collins chipped in RBI singles with the bases loaded. Adelphi hurler Chris Gage had forced in the first run of the game earlier in the inning, walking Barbara Meehan (4-for-7 on the afternoon) with the bases loaded.

The first frame of the second game recycled the same script, as both Collins and Aprile came to bat with runners on first an second and delivered run-scoring singles.

UMass picked up the third and final run of the day in the fourth, when Collins scored Cherie DellAnno from third base with a sacrifice fly.

Great pitching allowed the Minutewomen to get away with some poor baserunning against Maine. In the opener, Aprile did not allow a runner until the fourth whe she walked Laura Methot. Methot then broke up Aprile's no-hit bid in the sixth, squaring to bunt and then slapping a short single over the charging third baseman.

Aprile (a combined 4-for-6) made her presence felt offensively as well, tripling in the third inning and scoring on a Bonnie Schilling sacrifice fly. UMass scored its second run of the game in sixth, when Collins singled home Miller from second base.

In the second game, the Minutewomen tagged Maine's Sherri Bridges for three runs on nine hits, including a solo home run by Meehan that cleared the 210 foot sign hung on the left field fence by a good stretch.

■ men's track

Herb Heffner won the event in 9:25.9. Fitz Hagan was on his heels with a time of 9:27.1, followed by Jim McDonald with a 9:28.5. Meanwhile Jerome Bledsoe won the long jump for UMass with a leap of 23' 3/4", a half-inch margin of victory over the second place jumper.

The thriller of the day was probably the 1500. Using a sensational kick, Minuteman Steve Tolly edged the pack of front runners and broke the tape in a come from behind victory. "It was a tightly packed race all the way," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. Tolly's time of 3:56.7 was less than a second faster than his teammate Reinardo Flores' fourth place time of 3:57.5, an indication of how tight the race was. The UMass 4x100 relay team of Felix DeLaRosa, Garfield Vaughn, Michael Grey, and Kevin Walters took second with 43.6, their fastest time of the year.

UMass cooled off after the quick start, but still received some notable performances throughout the rest of the meet. Jeff White, Joe Lachiatto, and Bob Gillis took second, third, and fourth in the 110 high hurdles. Walters ran his fastest time outdoors in the 200 with a 22.6, taking second place. In the 100, Walters picked up fourth place and DeLaRose ran to fifth. Both were timed in 11.8 seconds. In the 400, Vaughn placed fourth in 50.3. Another notable performance was Chris Axford, who ran to a second place finish in the 5000.

Next weekend UMass sends its top athletes to Philadelphia to compete in the Penn Relays, a national collegiate invitational meet which attracts top college athletes around the country.

Pats reach high for help

FOXBORO (AP) — With a fleet of wide receivers under six feet tall, the New England Patriots reached for the sky yesterday and grabbed lanky Hart Lee Dykes in the first round of the NFL draft.

The 6-foot-4, 218-pound Dykes is expected to answer the need for a tall wide receiver who can catch the short passes that quarterback Tony Eason favors.

"He's just an unusually big receiver," said Dick Steinberg, the Patriots' player development director. "Guys like him can be covered and you can still complete a pass. He complements our other receivers because of hs size."

Steinberg said two other players were being considered before the Patriots made Dykes the 16th player taken in the draft. He refused to say whether one of those players was Andre Rison, a shorter, faster wide receiver from Michigan State.

But Patriots receivers coach Harold Jackson said Rison was considered but that the Patriots went with the taller Dykes "because he makes a lot of things happen."

Dykes, about five inches taller than the other members of the Patriots' receiver corps including Irving Fryar and Stanley Morgan, holds nearly all of the pass-catching records at Oklahoma State. During four years he caught 203 passes for 3,171 yards and 29 touchdowns and added 21 more catches for 339 yards and two touchdowns in three bowl appearances.

Gamble pays, C's in playoffs

BOSTON (AP) — Kevin Gamble, a survivor of the hard life of the Continental Basketball Association and the NBA bench, kept the Boston Celtics' season alive yesterday.

In his sixth NBA start, the rookie guard scored 23 of his career-high 31 points in the second half as the Celtics beat the Charlotte Hornets 120-110 to clinch a playoff berth on the final day of the regular season.

"He's paid his dues for so long this season," Boston coach Jimmy Rodgers said. "Then, to ask him to play a big role in your drive to the playoffs, he's done a tremendous job."

Boston, the winningest franchise in NBA history, needed a victory or a Washington loss at Philadelphia yesterday to beat the Bullets for the final Eastern Conference playoff spot. Washington, 40-42, lost 115-106.

The Celtics, 42-40 after breaking a three-game losing streak, play at Detroit Friday night in the opener of the best-of-five first-round series. Boston was 14-1 in its last 15 home games but didn't beat a winning team on the road all season and the Pistons have the league's best record.

Rodgers is proud that his team, plagued all season by injuries to key players, simply made the playoffs.

"This team has faced a lot of difficulty," he said. "They never quit."

Neither did Gamble, who rarely complained about his limited use as a substitute.

He was the CBA's leading scorer when Boston signed him Dec. 15 and placed Larry Bird on the injured list following surgery on both heels. Then Dennis Johnson sprained an ankle April 13, and Gamble, who had played only 140 minutes for Boston, finally got his chance. He started the final six games, averaging 22.8 points.

"I'm happy that I got the opportunity and the chance to make the best of it," said Gamble, whose previous career highs were 27 points as a starter and six as a substitute.

This no doubt threw a monkeywrench into Temple coach Tina Sloan Green's plans. Get this: she actually had to slow her team down to prevent the Gazelles from scoring. Temple reverted to their motion, half-court offense which moved the ball around the perimeter.

UMass managed to get possession back inside the two-minute mark and went into their version of the half-court, depending on quarterback/attacker Murphy to try and find a cutter in the eight-meter fan in front of the net.

The Owl defense was extremely tough in keeping the area in front of second-string goalie Stacie Brandt clear. Murphy, surveying the field, found an open Andrea Goldman at the top of the circle. Goldman took the pass in, penetrated, and fired, but Temple managed to get a piece of Goldman's stick as her shot fell to the ground, along with UMass' chance of an upset. Bossio felt that the 9-5 final was "great" compared to last year's 24-3 trashing. As for her stars of the game, Bossio says, "Cathy Fuhrman has been playing out of her mind lately. She's really taken charge of herself and the team. Lynn Hartman has done the same with the defense, and Ann King had her best game."

When asked about her inexperienced group of starters, Bossio replied, "They're much better than in the beginning but they still have a long way to go. I don't care as long as there is improvement and not regression."

The Gazelles picked up their second win of the year, over Rutgers. Bossio said, "We played hard right from the first whistle and we were never behind. We really put it together."

UMass' tough schedule doesn't stop, as it has two top 10 teams (Brown and Northwestern) to close the season. Bossio feels that "if we play like we did [yesterday], we can take both games."

Senior Helen Balaouras made the most of her opportunities, throwing a personal and school record 142 feet, 8 inches in the four-kilo hammer. The dry cement circle in which the hammer, discus, and shot put people throw off of was the biggest boost in the distances. Balaouras had been throwing in the 120s, but she suddenly exploded, throwing in the high 130s and low 140s.

Simone Marisseau extended her personal record in the shot with the winning toss of 40-5, one inch better than last week's result. Diane Ozolek qualified for the New England discus with her throw of 117-2, which was good enough for second. Tina White took a third in the hammer (131-1) and a fourth in the discus (110-4).

The javelin duo of Carla DeSantis and Nancy Laurie finished 1-2 with DeSantis winning with a distance of 133-10 and Laurie the runner-up with a 114-9.

The story for the runners was once again freshman Lee Ann Ambrose. She won the 400 (57.6) and took second behind Terri Smith in the 200. Smith, Brown's indoor All-American, won with a time of 25.2 in a headwind and Ambrose had a 25.9.

The other scorers for UMass came in pairs of third and fourth places in the half-mile (Sonja Vaughan and Michelle Pearlstine) and 400-meter hurdles (Sue McFadyen and Amanda Norvell). A single point was registered by fourth-place [illegible] Amy St. Pierre in the 3000.

The team's finish could have been better if freshman 800- and 1500-meter runner Precious Hill had been in the lineup, but unfortunately, she is out for the season.

But life does go on after Precious, and the team will have to work that much harder to make up for the loss of this superb athlete.

The Minutewomen will have one more meet - the Fitchburg State Invitational — to qualify for the New England and Eastern Championships, which are the first and second week of May, respectively.

Women's lax splits a pair

Gazelles defeat Rutgers before falling to Temple

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Remember that time-old story of David defeating Goliath by hurling a stone with a slingshot and then decapitating his head with Goliath's own sword? Well yesterday, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team almost cut down defending national champ Temple with a couple of swings of the lax stick as the Gazelles' late second-half surge just fell short, 9-5.

The weekend was not a total loss, however, as UMass (2-9) crushed Rutgers 13-5 on the Totman green Saturday to end what was an eight-game losing streak.

After the Owls' Katie Clemmer scored with 9:06 left to extend Temple's lead to 8-2, the Gazelles just went off as they scored three goals in a five-minute span. Senior co-captain Cathy Fuhrman (2 goals, 1 assist) led the charge, responding by depositing her second goal 35 seconds later.

UMass went into its familiar half-court game, letting Fuhrman or junior Sue Murphy (1 goal, 1 assist) run the point behind the Temple net. Their patience paid off as freshman Andrea Goldman shocked everyone with a nifty turnaround shot that found the lower right-hand corner. Junior Ann King closed the gap to 8-5 as Fuhrman found her cutting through the fan with 3:17 left.

Head coach Patti Bossio said, "One of our game strategies was to just slow it down. If we did that, we could slow the clock down and run our plays."

That was not the case in the first half as the quicker Owl team raced off to a 4-0 lead after only eight minutes of play. Temple showed the stuff champions are made of on the fourth goal, as they looked more like the Los Angeles Lakers on a fast break, with length-of-the-field runs and sharp passing until the score.

Bossio elected to slow the pace down as she switched out of the man-to-man defense into a 3-1-2-2-1 zone. This definitely helped sophomore netminder Liz Keats (13 saves), who was peppered early and often but kept UMass in the game. "We were fine once we got set up, but we're a little slow reacting to the transition. Liz has been playing great but they got to her down low."

Freshman Catherine Moran and the Gazelles defeated Rutgers Saturday before falling to Temple yesterday at Totman Field.

The second-half pace was quite suitable as UMass played Temple even 4-4, after the Owls took a 5-1 lead into halftime. "We rose to the occasion," said Bossio. "We're definitely a second-half team." This slowdown allowed for the three-goal rally, which whipped the small but rowdy crowd into a frenzy at the possibility of spoiling the Owls' bid for the top spot in the polls.

Softball hits grand slam over weekend

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

UConn two weeks back was the low point. Too cold, no hits, shaky defense and pitching, and a pair of shutout losses.

But that was (ice) ages ago. These days, the University of Massachusetts softball squad is soaking up the sun, piling up the hits, pitching golf balls and most importantly, winning.

Yesterday at Adelphi — which was ranked at one point as the third best team in the Northeast and was rolling off a pair pair of wins over mighty UConn on Saturday — the Minutewomen swept two games by the same score of 3-0.

The wins followed a 2-0, 3-0 destruction of the University of Maine in Amherst on Friday. UMass has now won six straight to improve to 20-18, and has not been scored on in its last four contests.

"These were by far the biggest wins for us since we've been back (from California)," gushed coach Elaine Sortino after conquering Adelphi.

"This really makes the region a mess, and we're right in the middle of the mess."

UMass will attempt to further muck up the local softball scene during a pair of games at the University of Hartford this afternoon (a makeup forced by this spring's forty days and forty nights of rain).

The 1-2 starting pitching combo of Holly Aprile and Chris Wanner had a lethal weekend. Aprile has stretched just three hits over her last two starts, surrendering a pair yesterday. Wanner meanwhile, has matched Aprile stride for shutout stride, unvieling her best stuff of the season against Maine.

Gorillas outgun Army, 9-7

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Nothing comes easy in life anymore — just ask the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

For the third straight game the Gorillas found themselves entangled in a good one, as the United States Military Academy defended its territory admirably for most of the game before UMass finally prevailed, 9-7 Saturday at Michie Stadium.

It seemed the Gorillas had dug into the round file of recently-discarded scripts for this one. When the two teams had battled through 45 minutes to a 6-6 deadlock, it was an all too familiar scenario.

Would it be like the Yale game, when UMass exploded in the fourth to turn a 7-6 deficit into a 13-8 win? Or more like Dartmouth, a down-to-the-wire grind that wasn't settled until an overtime goal spelled an 11-10 win?

Fortunately for the Gorillas, it was more of the former. UMass opened the final quarter with three straight tallies and then held on down the stretch to take its first-ever win on the enemy's home battleground.

"It was another barnburner, a typical UMass-Army lacrosse game," agreed UMass coach Dick Garber. It could have been easy to take the guys in uniform for granted this year. After all, hadn't they been humiliated by their rivals on the water Navy (12-1), and later spanked by top-ranked Johns Hopkins (17-4)?

But Army has traditionally been a monster game for the Gorillas. The Cadets had worked double overtime to knock off UMass here two years ago, and the year before also took a win in overtime at the Hill in front of arguably the biggest single-event gathering since Woodstock (well, maybe not that big).

Baseball wins only 1-of-4

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team has a habit of putting itself in a precarious position with regard to the Atlantic 10 Conference playoffs.

Each year, the Minutemen dig themselves a hole in the standings and rely on their ability to come up big in the final series of the year.

This season is no exception. UMass got swept by Rutgers yesterday at Lorden Field, 5-3 and 11-3, to give themselves a 1-3 record against the Scarlet Knights over the weekend.

But there is one thing that may be different between this season and the past two. In each of the past two years, the Minutemen were able to rally in the final A-10 series to make the tournament.

UMass is now 5-7 in the conference and 15-18 overall, and may very well have to sweep the Owls this weekend to have a shot at the playoffs.

And to do that, the Minutemen will have to hit a lot better than they did yesterday. UMass managed just five hits in the first game, which wasn't enough to support Dave Telgheder, who took the loss despite a decent performance.

The Scarlet Knights jumped out to a 4-0 lead and held off a sixth-inning rally in which the Minutemen pulled within one run.

In the second game, Rutgers came back from a 2-0 deficit, and eventually exploded for five runs in the seventh to put the game out of reach.

Cleanup hitter Sean Ryan went 3-for-4 with three doubles for Rutgers, driving in two runs and scoring another. The Scarlet Knights totalled 11 hits in the game.

Men's track third in quad meet

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

On what was a cold and windy day in Dedham, the University of Massachusetts men's track team took third in a four-team meet Saturday with Brown, Northeastern, and Southern Connecticut.

Saturday's results held no surprises as incoming favorite Brown tallied 76 points, good enough to take first and beat second place Northeastern with 66 points. UMass finished with 39, and Southern Conn. ended with 34 points.

According to coach Ken O'Brien the Minutemen had some "eye opening performances to start the meet off", storming out of the gate and winning three out of the first four events, including a sweep of the top three spots in the steeplechase.

Women's track a close third

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Though the throwers had another superb effort scoring two-thirds of the team's points, the University of Massachusetts women's track team finished last in a tri-meet Saturday.

The Minutewomen finished with 45 points, just 4½ points behind host Northeastern. Brown won the meet hands down with 86 1/2 points.

[illegible] should have beaten Northeastern," said head coach Julie LaFreniere. She is referring to an unsportsmanlike tactic by the part of the Huskies, who knowing the fact that UMass didn't have a 4x400 meter relay team, ran one anyway just to get an easy three points. UMass didn't field a team because of too many injuries, but could have to get the three points for second place.

Rugby gets split at Tufts

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Correspondent

MEDFORD — Missing Jeff Burrill with a separated shoulder, and Mike Toohey with a bad back and cracked ribs, along with Peter Bryson, Paul Usher and Gary Williams, the University of Massachusetts rugby team gained a split at Tufts University yesterday.

UMass suffered a frustrating loss in the first game, 14-6 as Tufts was able to control the tempo and field position throughout. Tufts scored first on a tri by Bill Holmes midway into the second half to put the score at 4-0. UMass was forced to play a more offensive-mided game, at which point Tufts scored another tri by Sting look-alike Eric Garrison.

Tufts made the kick after and the score was 10-nill. Tufts would score one more tri before Rich "Beef" Daley would run in UMass' only score of the game in the final minute.

One bright point of the game was the play of Mike "Topper" Commerford. In the first A-side game of his career, Commerford showed a couple of moves that impressed.

In the second game, the B-side shut out Tufts, 8-0 on tri's by Chris McIssack and Rob Singleton.

UMass will play Amherst tomorrow. Also, UMass was happy to announce the selection of Williams, a exchange student from Wales to the Northeast Collegiate All-Star squad.

Soccer inks four more

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team has signed four more players, bringing its total number of signees for the 1989 season to six, according to coach Jim Rudy.

Among the latest signees are Skye Eddy, a goalkeeper from Reston, Va; defenders Holly Hellmuth, from Fairfax Station, Va.; and Carrie Koeper, from Danville, Calif.; and Lisa Mickelson, a midfielder from St. Paul. Minn.

The four will join forwards Kim Eynard of Endicott, N.Y. and Robyn Holzman of Swampscott, who signed letters-of-intent earlier last week.

WEATHER: Temperatures will be a little warmer today and tomorrow, with highs around 60.

Anti-military protesters occupy Memorial Hall

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

After a day-long occupation of Memorial Hall by about 90 people, 37 activists opposed to military-funded research on campus settled in to spend the night, with food and entertainment.

A noon rally at Whitmore, organized by a group called People for A Socially Responsible University, brought about 50 people out. The protesters then marched to the Student Union chanting, "Money for tuition, not for ammunition."

The procession paused at the Student Union so speakers could voice opposition to the research on campus, and gather more supporters.

"There is a point beyond which we, as students, can no longer allow the administrative apparatus of the University to determine and control the direction and substance of our education," said Diane Ditmore, one of the seven people arrested last Wednesday for trespassing and disorderly conduct after they occupied a laboratory in Marcus Hall.

"This university is linked with the military and industrial forces which actively intervene in Central America," said Loyda Guzman, another UMass student arrested last week. "This is a racist policy that will continue mutilating the people of the Third World."

Jennifer Johnston, a representative of People for a Socially Responsible University, outlined the demands the demonstrators were making to the administration.

They demanded that UMass immediately stop all Defense Department research, grant free access to public documents regarding research on campus, reform the Board of Regents and Trustees, give students binding power over UMass police, re-establish the enrollment of 4,300 freshmen with no tuition or fee increases, a student/faculty study on the effect of military research on the University and a statement from the administration promising not to cooperate with the war in El Salvador.

After Johnston said the protest would continue back to Whitmore so the demonstrators could present the administration PSRU's demands in person, about 90 people poured into Memorial Hall.

"We will stay here until we are arrested," Marc Kenen, a UMass graduate student said.

Memorial Hall was chosen as the site of the occupation because it "was a symbolic gesture of those killed in wars. Vietnam is a prime example. We don't want another war added to this memorial," said Frank Bowrys, representing PSRU.

The protesters came prepared for a lengthy occupation, with several bags full of garlic and wheat bagels.

The protesters spent the first few hours of the occupation getting acquainted with one another. They all stated their names, where they went to school, their majors and the reason for participating in the take-over.

About 100 protesters occupied Memorial Hall yesterday, and 37 prepared to spend the night.

"I preregistered for 21 credits and got six because of cutbacks," said Eric Woodman, a senior communications major. "I think the big reason why me and everyone else in the College of Arts and Sciences got shortchanged is because the college is funded by the federal government and they don't have an interest in us because English majors don't build bombs."

The protesters listened attentively as each person spoke, several nibbling on bagels.

The number of protesters slowly dwindled to around 60 after Rick Townes, assistant dean of students, read the occupants the picketing code and the consequences if the code is violated.

He warned them that if they remained in the building after 5 p.m., they would be in violation of the code, and they would face the possibility of suspension from school or arrest.

Access to bathroom facilities was denied at about 4:30 p.m. The protesters set up a makeshift toilet in the corner of the room. People relieved themselves in a trashcan as others blocked them behind a banner.

At 5 p.m. Townes declared the students were violating the picketing code.

Dean of Students Joanne Vanin posed an offer to the protesters. She said Provost Richard O'Brien, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson, Research Chairman for the Faculty Senate Peter Rossi, student leaders and one additional faculty member agreed to meet with five of the protesters at 9 a.m. today to discuss the demands of PSRU.

After a group discussion, Rubin said the demonstrators would participate in the forum if it were held in Memorial Hall and with all the protesters and the press present.

He said the administration would decide this morning if it would accept the counter offer.

Hilson said police and "impartial observers" would remain with the protesters in Memorial Hall as long as the protest continued.

He allowed food to be brought into the room. Peanut butter, bread, matzoh, potato chips, fruit, water, marshmallow fluff, and a large box of freshly baked warm chocolate chip and nutty peanut butter cookies were provided by supporters of the protest.

The protesters requested guitars, casette tapes and a portable stereo also be provided. Hilson agreed to the request.

A rally is scheduled for today at 10 a.m. outside Memorial Hall, Rubin said.

Students maintain vigil for victims of genocide

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Junior Roy Chatalbash stood stone-faced as he held the red, orange and blue banner of his ancestors yesterday near the Student Union building.

"The reason for this vigil is twofold," said Chatalbash, president of the University of Massachusetts Armenian Students Association. "First, we're giving respect to those Armenians who died in the first genocide of the Century. Second, [the vigil] is in remembrance of man's inhumanity to man — universal oppression."

Chatalbash said the vigil commemorated April 24, 1915, when the Turkish government ordered the execution of 254 Armenian religious, political and intellectual leaders. In the three years that followed, he said, 1.5 million Armenians were killed under Ottoman rule.

For seven hours, members of the group took turns holding the a brass cross and the Independent Armenian flag, under which the Independent Armenian nation existed from 1918 to 1921. About 10 members of the club took part in this, the fifth annual vigil.

Wooden street barriers surrounded club members who held the symbols. Other members handed out flyers with information about the vigil.

Chatalbash, who was taking part in his third vigil, said students were receptive to the event, but increasing student awareness takes time, he said.

"We're catching people between classes," he said. "They're going to lunch and so

Report: Harassment declining

13 percent decrease attributed to education

By KATERI WALSH
Collegian Correspondent

Sexual harassment of female students by male faculty and staff at the University of Massachusetts has decreased overall since 1983 — but more explicit sexual advances by the same group have doubled in the past three years from 4 to 8 percent, according to a recent survey.

The report, issued by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, states that sexual harassment of female students by their male peers has also increased since 1986.

Grant Ingle, director of the office of human relations, attributed the decrease in overall harassment by faculty members, from 25 percent in 1983 to 12 percent in 1989, to educating University faculty and staff.

"It is clear that we've had an impact, but we still have a problem," said Ingle, who commissioned the survey.

"We've had victims of sexual harassment come forward, go through the grievance procedure, and prosecute," he said. "That stays in people's minds and has an impact."

Project Pulse, a division of SAREO, interviewed 301 female undergraduates by telephone on Feb. 22. Ten levels of sexual harassment, ranging in severity from negative remarks about females to "repeated, unwanted or inappropriate sexual attention" were identified in the SAREO survey.

The interviewers asked if students had experienced any of these levels of sexual harassment at UMass, either with faculty and staff, or fellow students.

Ingle said the increase of actual sexual advances by faculty may be attributed to younger faculty, "just out of grad school," who may be taking a more direct approach by asking female students for a date.

Nearly 60 percent of the respondents said they had been sexually harassed by male students. Seven percent said they had experienced all levels of sexual harassment identified on that part of the survey.

The high incidence of student-to-student harassment indicates a need for increased educational efforts in the dormitories and throughout the student body, Ingle said.

The Everywoman's Center was named most often as the campus office that respondents would contact with complaints, with 48.1 percent naming the center.

The percentage of students utilizing the UMass Police Department for sexual harassment complaints has increased dramatically from 14.5 percent in 1986 to 37.1 percent in 1989, according to the report.

Police Lt. Mike Grabiec said this was partly due to improved public relations, and the department's efforts to "increase trust and awareness within the community."

The vast majority of students questioned (94.3 percent) said they were aware sexual harassment is illegal. According to the report, 65.8 percent said they were aware of the UMass policy prohibiting sexual harassment, and 39.9 percent said they were aware of the grievance pro-

Second in a 10-part series on life at the University of Massachusetts

When Boreth Sun was nine years old, the Khmer Rouge came to power in Cambodia. That was the year his childhood ended.

UMass student Boreth Sun

Now a University of Massachusetts student and a US citizen, Sun remembers life in his native land during the violent rule of Pol Pot and the subsequent invasion by the Vietnamese in 1979.

"I lived in the jungle for about eight months," he said. "I was trying to escape the Khmer Rouge. My father had died in a concentration camp. I saw my brother get shot. There were so many executions.

"I couldn't find the rest of my family. I was arrested by the Vietnamese because they thought I was Khmer Rouge, even though I was only about 13 years old."

Sun eventually made his way to a refugee camp in Thailand where he stayed for two and a half years. In 1982, under the sponsorship of the Lutheran Church, he came to Amherst to live with foster parents.

Sun's experiences are typical. Of the 34 UMass students who are Cambodian, virtually none has been left untouched by one of the worst holocausts of this century.

"The Cambodians are a very special population," said Lucy Nguyen, a counselor in the Bilingual Collegiate Program. "They don't just have language and academic problems. They bring with them the scars from seeing their parents and family members killed before their eyes.

"Some have no idea if their relatives are still alive," she said. "When you live in that kind of situation how can you concentrate on studying?"

The Khmer Rouge wiped out nearly half the population, particularly the intellectuals and urban professionals. That left a void in the ranks of the elite that this generation of college-educated refugees must replace, Nguyen said.

"We have to get them educated and back into their communities," she said. "There is a crucial need for people trained in social services, human services and bilingual education."

"The Cambodian communities in this country are in crisis. In Lowell, the population is already 29,000. The city is not ready for them," Nguyen said.

Sun, who will graduate in May with a degree in human services, plans to work with refugees in this country and in the camps in Thailand and the Philippines. While at UMass he has tutored at Amherst High School and been a translator for the Bilingual Collegiate Program. He also serves on the Chancellor's Commission for Civility.

"The greatest difficulty that a Cambodian student has here is not enough education," he said. "When the Khmer Rouge first came, it was too dangerous to go to school, and then they closed them all anyway.

"In Cambodia I had four years of schooling. I got here when I was 17 and had three days before I had to start high

UMass students dig for Israeli archeological gold

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

During an afternoon stroll through Herter Hall one year ago, Anthony Saccavino happened to glance at a poster hanging innocently on a bulletin board.

A few weeks and several phone calls later he was sifting through sand on the coast of Israel, searching intently for ancient treasure.

Saccavino, who made his second journey to Israel last summer, is one of about 25 students and faculty who camped in bungalows and participated in an annual expedition to Tel Nami, a tiny secluded peninsula on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea.

"I like to dig and I had a lot of questions to ask," he said. "The next thing I knew I was landing at the airport [in Israel]."

The area is the site of a major archaelogical boon — an ancient international seaport discovered by Professor Michal Artzy, who leads faculty and student volunteers on an annual summer expedition to unearth ancient artifacts, some dating back 4,000 years.

Artzy has been working on the site for the past four years, but she said last summer yielded the biggest find, citing several a dig," Artzy said, adding that applications are currently being accepted in the Judaic and Near East Studies Department.

Janel Bisacquino, a UMass senior, journeyed from Greece to Israel last summer to attend the program, said the expedition begins with removing "tons" of sand to reach the now buried seaport but added that her callouses were well worth her first discovery of a brass bowl attachment to an incense burner.

"I've contributed to history," she said. "It's a great feeling."

Students were able to travel throughout Israel and neighboring countries and explored several of the nation's museums, she said.

"We kept saying, 'Hey we have one of those at the site,' " when students eyed the museums artifacts, Bisacquino said. "It's extraordinary. Not only do we have them, but we found them."

Saccavino said the site is far from the sites where Palestinian and Israeli conflicts continue to rage.

"I felt safer walking around at night in Tel Aviv than I would in New York city," he said.

'Ambassador program' promotes University

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials have recently unveiled a program to help raise public awareness and promote the University in communities across the state, using alumni to do the job.

Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor for University relations and development, has been working for about two years on the development and coordination of the "Ambassador Program," in which alumni are recruited to act as local representatives of UMass in their home communities, she said.

"It's an attempt to build a grassroots organization," she said. "We really need this type of organiztion whether there is a budget crisis or not."

Ling said the "ambassadors," as they are called, will help promote UMass through lobbying efforts, community awareness programs such as interviewing accepted students to encourage their attending the University, and making their home towns aware of the benefits they receive from UMass.

"One of the things we hope [ambassadors] will do, is write opinion/editorial pieces for their newspapers," she said.

The program is starting small with about 20 initial ambassadors but Ling hopes they will recruit more people to the University's cause.

There are a total of 120,000 alumni to call upon, Ling said, but parents and friends of alumni are as much a target of the drive as anyone.

"We are hoping they will recruit friends school. I knew almost no English.

"I had no idea what was expected of me," he said. "I said to myself 'what am I doing here?' But within a year I was speaking English pretty well.

Nguyen said Cambodian students need special encouragement to finish their schooling because many come from illiterate peasant families where there is no tradition of higher education. Others are orphaned and no longer have parents to give them the push they need.

"There's not enough outreach to the young Cambodian population from the University," she said. "I am the only Asian counselor here, and I don't even speak their language."

According to Irwin Staub, UMass psychology professor, another challenge Cambodians face is coming to terms with the horrors they have been through.

"When you experience so much fighting, chaos and danger," he said, "you begin to question the goodness of the world. You come to see other people as dangerous and to fear them.

"Also, these people had no control over what happened to them. The feeling of having control over events is profoundly important to human beings."

These are some of the symptoms of post traumatic stress disorder, an affliction common to Cambodian refugees. Nguyen added that an additional problem is the natural reluctance Cambodians have to talking openly about what bothers them.

"In the Asian cultures you don't expose your problems," she said. "They won't tell you too much about the hell they have been through. They have submerged their sadness and bad experiences in order to get on with their lives."

"Most of them know this is their second home. They are here to stay. That's what drives them to do well. They have no choice," she said.

Sun said he doesn't talk too often about what he went through in Cambodia because it brings back bad memories.

"I don't really know how I got through it," he said. "Sometimes I try to forget it, but it's in my subconscious. It takes me awhile to trust people."

"But," he said, "some of the things I've been through have motivated me to become a stronger person."

Culture and tradition are very important to Cambodians, Sun said, and being reminded about the good things of home helps them to adjust to their new lives in America.

"New Year's celebrations and other festivals bring the community together," he said. "It's good for the second generation to know about them."

Sun's mother and four surviving brothers and sisters are still in Cambodia. Because the political situation there is still far from stable, he worries about them and would like to bring them here. Right now that seems impossible.

"The refugee camps are officially closed," he said. "Even if they could make it to Thailand they would only be considered displaced persons. Very few refugees are being accepted these days."

Nguyen said those who have made it to America still have a hard time getting into the mainstream. Sun agreed, saying a lot of hard work is required to break the barriers.

"Because of our educational and economic background, we can't compete," he said.

Nguyen said, "I tell them: the fight is on and it's on for many, many years," she said. "Be strong and be prepared. They're lucky not to be under the Communist regime, but life is still hard."

Law-breaking judge disregards justice

Wouldn't it be logical to assume (even though society shuns assumption) that a judge who carries out the law would know better? The duty of a judge, especially a Massachusetts Superior Court judge, is to try to make sure the legal system functions. That the law is enforced. That favorites aren't played.

Meredith O'Brien

Judges should know the tremendous difficulties that the police endure when trying to make arrests stick. At least judges should . . .

On April 20, Judge Joesph S. Mitchell Jr. was acquitted of the charges of drunken driving. Mitchell had refused to take a breath analysis test. He claimed that the breathalyzers were inaccurate, that they could be "fixed" by policemen. Mitchell called the sobriety tests a sham.

By his refusal to allow a breath analysis, his license was revoked for 120 days (by Massachusetts law).

Many defense lawyers applauded Mitchell's acquittal, stating that they too were against the breath analysis machine's ineffectiveness. They want "really good blood testing" to be conducted by policemen when making a drunk driving arrest.

Charles V. Barry, Massachusetts's public safety secretary, stated that the machines used by Massachusetts police are tamper-proof and that those who administer the breathalyzer must be certified by the state.

Mitchell's victory represents a dangerous threat to drunk driving convictions. It has been stated time and time again that we have a problem with drunk drivers. The number one cause of traffic fatalities stems from drinking and driving. What we need is tougher drunk driving laws, not lax ones.

The only means police have of arresting a driver who is suspect of driving under the influence is either by road block or the breath analysis. Even though road blocks, the random stopping of cars to assure that the drivers are sober (i.e. — New Year's Eve road blocks), are questionable when it comes to a right to privacy, the breathalyzer test is not an invasion of privacy.

If you take away the right of the police to administer a breathalyzer test, what means could they use legitimately to charge someone with drunk driving? A driver has to drive recklessly or weave on the road to be suspect for breath analysis. Without this test, how could an officer arrest a suspect? Bring along a mini, pocket blood specialist to measure one's blood alcohol content? Somehow, I think that a driver would be more conducive to a simple breathalyzer machine rather than a devilish nighttime Dracula who wants to stick a syringe in your arm to extract some blood.

Take a look at the Mitchell incident: He was arrested on January 18th on Commonwealth Ave. (Newton, MA) after police had reported that his car had been weaving on the wrong side of the road, had straddled the double-yellow line, and had a shredded left front tire. Perfectly sober driving, huh?

Police also noted that when they accosted Mitchell, he smelled strongly of alcohol.

Granted, though these facts logically point to some degree of alcohol consumption, Mitchell could not be assumed to be drunk. But then this judge refused to take a breathalyzer test. Why? Could it possibly have been the fact that he did indeed have more than he claimed to have had — three-quarters of a scotch and water and an ounce of wine?

Mitchell should know that it is very difficult for police to attain drunk driving convictions. By challenging their right to give a breathalyzer, he is destroying any chance that they might have to try and control the number of drunk driving accidents — to try to save some lives. Mitchell's case gives incentives to other fellow drunkards to refuse the test and get off scott-free.

Maybe Mitchell needs a little lesson in ethics. Perhaps he would rest easier with a few more drunks on the road standing up for their right to refuse a breathalyzer . . .

Wanted: some self-reliance

Recently British prime minister Margaret Thatcher was asked whether she thought Gorbachev's reforms would survive. She replied that new Soviet freedoms of speech were already a success, but that liberties for personal initiative would take more adjustment because people not accustomed to making decisions are insecure about being on their own. She could as easily have been talking about UMass students as about Soviet citizens, because her idea of being on one's own is self-reliance: financial independence, personal liability, career responsibilities.

Rusty Denton

Thatcher is a champion of self-reliance. She has been proving its potency by shaking British government out of industry and letting commercial ventures stand or fall without subsidies. Newly privatized industries that lost money for decades when run by government have suddenly discovered ways to sell decent products at competitive prices and still turn a profit. Unemployment is down, taxes are down, spirits are up and Thatcher has been re-elected twice. Schools are being turned over to local communities, and hospitals are next in line for privatization.

It is ironic that Thatcher has come to symbolize what was once called "The American Way" while we in America steer toward the kind of bloated socialist government the British are glad to shed. We're abandoning self-reliance wholesale by discouraging personal responsibity and squelching individual initiative.

Think about it. When someone is at fault in a major auto accident, what do they do these days? They hire a lawyer. Their lawyer goes out and finds someone, anyone, who has deep pockets — a mechanic, a property owner, another driver, a local township — it really doesn't matter who. Then the lawyer sues deep pockets and soaks their insurance company for everything she/he can get, not because of any real guilt, but because Americans love to have a scapegoat. Every defense lawyer looks for one.

I call it the politics of blame. It has caused insurance premiums to skyrocket; qualified doctors, retailers and truck drivers have found that insurance bills make it too expensive to be an entrepreneur. I recently read where a middle-aged Massachusetts doctor closed his medical practice and opened a laundromat, not because he'd ever faced malpractice suits, but because his insurance cost close to a hundred grand a year.

Maybe I should call it the politics of security instead, because that is what so many people want: government guarantees against AIDS, poverty, ignorance, accidents, childbirth, disappointment. Even now the Supreme Court is preparing to review the Webster case bearing on the "right" to an abortion. Such a "right" is just government security against pregnancies that, more than 99 percent of the time, are conceived during entirely voluntary sexual acts.

It strikes me that abortion on demand and so many other coveted government guarantees are just the kind of insurance someone would ask for if they were insecure about self-reliance — a kind of federal safety net where, no matter how irresponsible you were, you wouldn't have to bear the consequences.

That's immature. Maturity is about prudence and courage, about facing the unknown and not bailing out during difficulties. It's independence whenever possible. I don't know that America should ape Margaret Thatcher's Britain, but the power of personal grit is universal. Embracing self-reliance is a rite of passage. Some, like the Soviet government, have come to it only recently. Others, like UMass students, have to decide how long they'll put it off.

Don't put it off too long. As the British and Soviets are proving, the longer you postpone it, the harder it is to get weaned from the ministrations of authority figures.

Bad conduct

I am not one who is easily angered, but the scene I witnessed last Wednesday while coming out of my afternoon COINS class deeply disturbed me and many others.

What first caught my attention was a middle-aged man, whom I suspect was and Engineering Professor, yelling at someone on the other side of Marcus Hall. He was telling them to stop writing on the side of the building and that the University was private property, that he was going to call the police. I decided to walk around the side of the building, expecting to spot some vandals with cans of spray paint. To my surprise, I only discovered 10 or so people protesting the research of Anthrax on campus. It took me a few seconds to realize why this professor was in such a frantic state, as I rounded the corner to get a better view of what was going on.

It wasn't the protestors, or the signs they held, or the video camera that was apparently recording the whole fiasco. What outraged the professor, and myself, was the scribble obscenities on the side of Marcus Hall. The obscene statements, which were written in brightly colored chalk, were degrading to the University of Massachusetts as a whole, and singled out the Engineering Department in particular.

The professor told the protesters that they had no "pride." I would add that they also had no class. If their intent was to create an impression on the students and faculty on this campus, they certainly did so. Unfortunately, it was an ugly one. The protestors' cause may be noble, but their methods were insulting and inexcusable. They have lost my silent support and sympathy towards their cause, as their rudeness and disrespect for this University overshadowed any point they were trying to convey.

Speaking up

"It doesn't make a difference. Nobody will read it."

I heard this as I sat at the table in the Student Union trying to coax passers-by into writing letters to their representatives protesting further budget cuts to the university.

OK, things look bad. By now we all know about the horrors we can expect to face: losing classes, professors, TA's, books, and any number of other essential elements to a basic education. Now the question burning in all of your minds is, "So what the hell good did it do that I spent ten minutes writing a letter to my representative?! We got screwed over anyway. Mumble grumble."

This is what difference it made: The Rosenburg Amendment was an amendment to the State Budget that proposed to add back $15 million to higher education plus library funds. This was our great hope in the State House of Representatives for alleviating the budget crisis to the University of Massachusetts and other state colleges. The bad news is, it failed by a vote of 73 yea and 78 nay. The good news is that before we wrote those 2000 plus letters and before 700 public university students (98 from UMass) went to lobby in Boston on March 8, there were only 16 representatives who had publicly expressed support for the Rosenberg Amendment.

The House of Representatives State Budget proposal is being reviewed by the Senate. We still have a chance to amend the budget to provide more for public higher education by voicing our concerns to our Senators. There will be a hearing in Springfield on the education-related parts of the budget on April 27 which students will attend to testify. (Starting at 9 a.m., buses will leaving for Springfield Thursday.) The Student Trustee's office is looking for students living in the Boston area who are willing to lobby to congress through the summer.

forth. They're putting the flyers in their backpacks and forgetting about them."

Since the Soviet Union took control of Armenia in 1921, Armenians have sought their own free and independent nation, said sophomore John Harutanian.

"The purpose of the vigil is not just to mourn the events of 1915," he said, "but more a time to educate and inform UMass students of the 8 million-person [Armenian] population that seeks to promote its culture and its history."

Chatalbash said in 1921, when the Soviet Union and the Ottoman Empire were fighting for control of Turkey, Armenia "had the option of being conquered by the Soviets or the Turks." The Armenians decided to live under Soviet rule, he said.

Harutanian said since the Soviets took control, "reforms haven't been substantial. In fact, it's been so slight that it's almost been negligable."

Chantalbash said the bitterness that still exists between Turks and Armenians became apparent in last year's battle in the streets of the small town of Karabagh between Armenians and Azerbaijanis.

"Two years ago no one knew where Armenia was. Now they have an idea," he said.

and neighbors who have sons and daughters that are going to the University. If each [ambassador] recruits two other people we don't know about we'll have 60. That's how we're trying to expand," she said.

Recruited ambassador Kevin Burke graduated from UMass in 1982 with a degree in economics, said he has two reasons for joining the program.

"First, I know that UMass has given me a great deal. I received a great education, so any time I can give back to the University a token of my appreciation I do it. Second, its a way of letting the people in the commonwealth know about our school," he said.

"Through this program we can reach out and generate some of the pride that is evident at other schools," he said.

Burke said many people in the commonwealth don't realize the economic impact UMass has on the state as a whole and they need that information.

"So much of the work at UMass really impacts on the economy," he said. "Research at UMass benefits cranberry farmers on the Cape."

William Rex, class of '52, put five daughters through the University and feels a great appreciation for his alma mater, he said.

"The prime reason [for becoming an ambassador] is I'm a believer in the University of Massachusetts," Rex said.

A majority of students, 69 percent, ranked fear of retaliation as the reason most likely to discourage them from reporting sexual harassment. More than half the students cited embarrassment or hopelessness about solving the problem as discouraging factors. All three of the reasons have increased in importance since 1983, the report concluded.

Jello and Lard: ingredients in fudge from hell

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

"A wee bit OTT?" Yeah, I guess so. OTT, for those that don't know means Over The Top and I suppose that is an accurate assessment of Thomson's behaviour of late. Anyway, it doesn't faze me. I know the sad truth: that he sits there in his basement, knees twitching, blasting the Saturday Night Fever (Actually, I'm more inclined to Can't Stop the Music Jon - Ed.) soundtrack on his 8-track, while thinking up new slanderous bile to dump on my columns. You can't win against a personality like that, especially when it gets to edit your copy. Check this out: Thomson is a complete SWELL PERSON." You see? The race is finished before it even begins. But enough bickering, lets just review some records, shall we?

Today's parcel of musical wealth comes to the Disc Junkies's ears courtesy of Peter Lee, host of the infamous radio show Non Sequitur Theare. Evey Monday night from 9:30 to Midnight on WMUA, he spins the kind of music covered in this column and much more. So if you've been wanting to investigate some of the stuff mentioned here but prefer to audition the material before dispensing the hard-won greenbacks then tune in!

First up is a collaboration that will have Dead Kennedys fans drooling. What do you get when you couple DKs vocalist Jello Biafra with Alain Jourgenson, the man behind Mininstry? Answer: Lard. No, that's not a judgement call, that's the name of the band.

They have released a three-song EP called The Power of Lard, although one of the songs is 32 minutes long, bringing the package to album length. Still, it sell for less, so the bottom line is: You win.

When I first learned of this collaboration, I was hoping for the industrial dance attack of Ministry combined with Biafra's politically hip vocals, but what I got was basically another DKs record. The title track is something special: crazed thrashings, Biafra's witty lyrics and the ultimate scream-along-with-Mitch chorus. Biafra asks rhetorical questions like "Which came first Max Headroom or Gerald Ford?" while the band lays down some incredible grungework. Unfortunately the other two tracks do not measure up.

"Hellfudge" is a nice swipe at televangelists, but that subject is really tiring now. The real loser is "Time to Melt": For over half an hour you get to hear a droning, repetitive piece of sludge. It oozes out of your speakers as if played by a second rate blues band that has no concept of timing, singing or when to stop. To sum it up, DKs fans will need this record, hardcore fans will want this record, and the rest of us might just like it.

Next up we have the second solo album from Keith LeBlanc called Stranger than Fiction. LeBlanc, as you may know, is the drummer for Adrian Sherwood's industrial funk band Tackhead. Although this particular record does not bear the Tackhead label, there's little reason for it not to, as it features all the members of that band at various points.

The recipe here is simple: take LeBlanc's powerful rhythms, add lots of seriously funky guitar and bass to taste and serve LOUD. There's a lot of atmosphere in here as well. The ambient piece "Men in Capsules" reminds me a lot of the film Blade Runner. The music swirls and dives while a bass voice recites some cyberpunk lyrics, and just as you are getting seduced by the synths, it suddenly moves into the next song, a blistering funk number called "Dream World".

I really like this album a hell of a lot. It's inventive, with thoughtful, rather than gratuitous use of the found vocal pieces. First-rate musicianship and interesting production doesn't hurt either. It's got a sense of integrated style that most bands can only dream about. One of my faves of the year, so far.

Plastic People show a universal approach toward thrash

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff
Plastic People of the Universe
Iron Horse
Sunday, April 23

They were billed as "the most important show this year." And on Sunday night, Czechoslavakian band Plastic People of the Universe proved that they were at least one of the best shows this year at the Iron Horse.

The political, progressive band was arrested in Prague, Czechoslavakia in 1968 for disturbing the peace during one of their shows. They have been in exile from their native land ever since. The postponement of this tour due to state police harassment, and the fact that this was their only New England appearance only added to the interest in this band. But could they live up to the hype?

The answer is a definitive yes. Through their twelve song set, including two encores (the second of which was unplanned) the seven member band proved that they could rock with the best hardcore bands that America has to offer. Led by Karel Jancak's scorching lead guitar, the band kept the sold out crowd of young and old completely satisfied.

Beautiful lead singer Michaela Nemcova, although six months pregnant with twins, was nothing short of incredible. Dressed in black overalls and a black jacket, the intense Czech, who sounds like a cross between Kristen Hersh of Throwing Muses and Kate Bush, hit every note in the entire musical scale. Her eyes were more often closed than open and her hands were either tightly gripping the mike stand or shoved deep within her jacket pockets. She often turned her back to the crowd or simply walked offstage when she wasn't singing. But her genuine smile and occasional "Thank you very much" made it easy for the crowd to connect with her.

Bass player, and one of the three original members, Milan Hlavsa, occasionally shared in lead vocals. With his sunglasses, Billy Idol sneer, and loud gum chewing, he was obviously the personality of the band. His harsh, angry voice brought back memories of Iggy Pop in his prime.

The songs ranged from driving hardcore to the haunting, chantlike sound of "Song for Nico." Even though none of the songs were in English, the energy and intensity of the band led the crowd to its feet after the first encore to demand a second one.

Plastic People is a band that, because of their political reputation, would have pleased the crowd just by showing up. But they played their hearts out anyway.

Sematary buries itself in a shallow grave

By DOUG MIDDLETON
Collegian Correspondent

Pet Sematary is the first film based on one of horror master Stephen Kings' novels that King himself wrote the screenplay for. Sounds promising, eh? Well I can recall the same optimism in the back of my naive mind when King helmed directonal chores for his self admitted 'moron movie' Maximum Overdrive. The results are of a similar caliber to that "truck goes amock" turkey.

FILM REVIEW

For years film makers have blown the chance to adapt succesful films from King's novels. A talented director such as Brian De Palma and his 1976 version of Carrie, or a standout performance by Christopher Walken in The Dead Zone, have provided some of the exceptions. All of Kings' novels have the potential for an excellent scare flick but most such as Cujo and now, Pet Sematary have more bark than bite.

Pet Sematary concerns a family moving into a house in Maine with a winding path leading to a pet cemetry in their own backyard. Miles behind the graves of canines and kitties of yesteryear lies an Indian burial ground where animals, when buried, come back from the dead. When the nauseatingly cute daughter of the family loses her cat to a mac truck, the father of the family uses the grounds to revive the feline. Soon this feat is used for other purposes - reviving dead humans- and things go awry.

Director Mary Lambert ,with past cinematic disasterpiece Siesta and a number of Maddonna videos to her discredit, ruiins one of Kings most effective tales, refusing to make the film believable or, worst of all, scary.

One of the worst elements of the film is the descent into insanity of the central character, the father, played with all the zest of plain yogurt by Dale Midkiff. I had a similar problem with Jack Nicholson's interpretation of hotel caretaker Jack Torrance in Kubrick's The Shining. In King's novel, Torrance is an ordinary guy turned into a creep. In Kubrick's film he is a creep from scene one. In Pet Semaetary Midkiff is agreeable enough, but like Nicholson his character does not go through any drastic personality changes. Whe the dead start to arise, his reactions are laughably out of context with his portrayal.

The rest of the cast are similarly bland. Only Fred Gwynne leaves much of an impression as the odd neighbor, but it's not his performance that is so great, it's just that, well, he's Fred Gwynne.

Lambert filmed the tale in King's home state of Maine but she does not create the atmosphere that is so essential to a King story (the recent Dead Calm uses its environment to much greater effect.) And as with Cujo, a lot of sub-plots are needlessly kept from the novel. Pet Sematary leaves these intact via some ridiculous flashbacks. Remember Griffin Dunne as the talking corpse in American Werewolf in London - well this film has one too, and the results are unintentionally humorous.

The final father-son showdown is admittedlly tense, but this is the only nail-biting section in a film otherwise devoid of suspense. I realize the book is usually better than its filmed version, but this trend of King movie clinkers has gone on too long even if all the prints of Pet Sematary were buried in the movie's Indian burial grounds, it would not do any good: Nothing could bring this dog back to life. realize the book is usually better than its filmed version, but this trend of King movie clinkers has gone on for too long. Even iif all the prints of Pet Sematary were buried in the Indian burial grounds in this film, it would not do any good; nothing could bring this dog back to life

The second game was tight through seven, as UMass clung to a 1-0 lead behind starter Chris Wanner. The Minutewomen opened up a 4-0 lead in the top of the final frame, when Miller tripled and scored on an errant throw. Meehan and Collins followed with singles, setting the stage for a two-RBI double for Wanner.

lege [in an 11-3 loss]," Stone said. "Hopefully, he'll get in a groove. We need a good mid-week pitching performance."

But most of all, UMass will need hitting. The leading hitter, Brian Donovan, has been plagued with wrist and back injuries. And among the regular starters, only two, outfielder Drew Seccafico and first baseman Drew Comeau, are hitting over .300.

Seccafico is at .358 and leads the team in hits with 39. Comeau is hitting .306 and is tied for the team lead in home runs with five. Seccafico and Comeau lead the team with 28 runs batted in each.

Minutemen falter against Tufts 7-2; 6th in A-10s

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team swallowed some pride yesterday with a disappointing 7-2 loss against Tufts University.

"The wind was a factor," said coach Manny Roberts "but both teams had to contend with it. These guys are still bent up from this weekend at the A-10s."

The Minutemen's two fantastic wins came from seniors Brian Gable and Humberto Soto.

Gable, the number one singles, played a great match against, David Ober. Despite the winds chilling gusts, Gable took the match 6-4, 7-6 (8-6).

Soto, no. 5, won in an incredible three setter 7-5, 2-6, 6-1.

"I really wanted to win my last home match," said Soto.

The Minutemen went into the doubles down 2-3 but still had a chance to take the match. However, all three doubles teams lost. At number one, Gable and Chris Johnson lost, 7-6, 7-6. Paul Audet and Rich Stone gave in to the number-two doubles, and walked away with a 6-3, 6-0 loss. And, at third doubles Soto and Matt Murphy made a valiant attempt, but their opponents took the win 7-5, 6-3.

In this past weekend's matches [the Atlantic 10s at Rutgers University], UMass nabbed the 6th place position.

Gable won his first round match against his URI opponent in straight sets. In his second round, he lost to the number one seed Paul Mancini from West Virginia.

Audet, no. 3, beat his St. Bonaventure opponent and then advanced. Unfortunately he met with the number one seed for third singles, who again was from West Virginia, and lost.

Stone, no. 4, also won his first round match. But, in his second round match lost to the fourth singles player from Rutgers.

Although number five singles player, Soto, lost his first round match against his Rutgers opponent, he made a great comeback and won the entire fifth-singles consolation round.

Matt Murphy lost his sixth-singles match to Penn State, however, he redeemed himself with a third place finish in his consolation round.

Minutewomen lose a deuce

Fall to Central Conn, PC

By BRAD HALFOND
Collegian Correspondent

Just when things were looking better for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team, they ran into a pair of powerhouse teams this past friday and yesterday.

On friday, UMass dropped a 7-2 decis on to Providence and yesterday Central Connecticut State humbled the Minutewomen 8-1.

The Providence affair featured several close matches that could have easily made the situation a bit more uncomfortable for the Friars.

Number two singles, Gail Girasella was again involved in a three set match which this time she lost 7-5, 5-7, 6-3 and the third doubles squad of Maura Foley and Tonya Sides also suffered a tough three set loss 5-7, 6-3, 6-3.

"We gave them a scare," said Foley commenting on her team's performance. "We were knockin on the door," added UMass coach Mike Husted.

Friday's two victories came from no.4 Shizuko Yamaski and no.6 Vanessa Kirchner. Everyone else on the team fell in straight sets.

Before yesterday's match against Central Conn Husted stated, "this is one match we don't want to let get by us." Needless to say, things didn't quite work out as planned.

With the exception of a victory by third doubles, Foley and Sides, the rest of the team was handled quite easily the more efficient Blue Devils.

"The team is worn down and we're tired of traveling," said Husted, "but I'm still somewhat disappointed with these two losses. Despite the defeat though, the squad pull-

Crew teams torpedo Coast Guard at home

By C.J. ABATI

Saturday morning, the University of Massachusetts crew teams raced against teams from the Coast Guard Academy and Worcester Polytechnic Institute on the Connecticut River in Hadley. It was a mixed day, but overall UMass had a good outing.

The women's varsity eight did not have work hard to remain undefeated, as they crushed WPI. They won by a huge margin, outdistancing WPI by about five lengths.

"The results were pretty much as expected. Things are looking promising for the New Englands and the Nationals," said UMass coach Dave Trond. The jayvee boat had little trouble, winning by four lengths. The novice team's first victory of the season rounded out the day for the UMass women. Their B-boat finished ahead of Coast Guard's. They also raced a four that was victorious.

The men's races included both the Coast Guard Academy and WPI. The lightweight-eight was the most exciting race of the day. The Coast Guard boat is always one of the fastest in the area, and usually wins a medal at the nationals. Saturday morning however, the UMass lightweights edged Coast Guard by a half a length.

The UMass women's varsity team after they took first on the Connecticut River this past weekend.

The race was neck-and-neck all the way, with UMass pulling ahead in the final seconds. "We had a great sprint in the end that won it for us. Most crews time themselves by how well they do against Coast Guard. This victory shows we should do well in the New Englands," said Trond.

The heavyweight men had a disappointing day. The team is still looking for its first victory. The boat from Coast Guard won the race by several lengths. UMass came in second, with WPI finishing a distant third. "Our season has been frustrating so far. We can't seem to finish on top. I haven't decided if I'm going to break up the heavyweight eight, and make the best four," said Trond. The novice eight also had a run of bad luck, losing by a large margin.

Softball wins 8th straight with sweep of Hartford

Maybe they're better off without any time off — the University of Massachusetts softball team has played eight games in the last five days, including yesterday's pair at the University of Hartford, and has won them all to improve to 22-18.

The Minutewomen will play two more tomorrow, playing host to Central Connecticut for a doubleheader (Totman, 3 p.m.).

UMass swept Hartford 7-3, 4-1 yesterday, drawing on its reborn bats and suffocating starting pitching in both wins. Mary Duff led the UMass offensive attack with a 5-for-7, two RBI afternoon that earned a complimentary intentional walk at day's end.

"She was a total offensive weapon for us today," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "They had a really tough time with her."

UMass pounded Hartford starter Tracy Ciosek in the opener, erupting for five runs in the third inning to break open what was then a one run game.

Cherie DellAnno, Jen Miller, and Barbara Meehan (3-for-4) strung together consecutive triples to open the inning. Ciosek broke the string by allowing Chris Collins a double, before Holly Aprile (3-for-3) homered deep over the leftfielder's head to clear the basepaths. "They were all shots," said Sortino. Aprile meanwhile, pitched well at either end of a relief appearance by fellow freshman Jen Devlin to record her ninth win.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team will go back to the drawing board this week for perhaps the last meaningful time when it uses three mid-week games to tune up for the final Atlantic 10 Conference series of the year.

The Minutemen, who have lost five of their last six games, will open things up today with a 3 p.m. game against Central Connecticut State University at Lorden Field.

UMass, 15-18 overall and 5-7 in the A-10, will be looking to find the key to success that has eluded it over the weekend against Rutgers, which came to Amherst and won three of four from the Minutemen.

"We need to get back on track," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I've tried to shake things up but what we really need is to wear our hitting shoes."

UMass was hot and cold with the bat against the Scarlet Knights, and has not supported its starting pitchers well. Stone said Jeff Richardson will get the start this afternoon.

For Richardson, a senior righthander, it will be the first start of the season. He is 0-1 with a 6.57 earned run average.

Memorial Hall sit-in ends; 52 arrested

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

After a two-day occupation of Memorial Hall, 29 protesters who all later identified themselves as Abbie Hoffman, were arrested early yesterday evening inside the building. Another 23 people were arrested outside the building.

10 people cooperated with police and walked out of Memorial Hall, but 19 people were dragged from the building into a University of Massachusetts schoolbus.

UMass police, clad in riot gear, made the initial arrests. Amherst town police, UMass-Boston police and several dozen state police officers were on hand to assist the campus police, said Jeanne Hopkins, office of public information director.

The state police officers surrounded the entrances of Memorial Hall. They stood erect tightly grasping their billy clubs while about 200 onlookers chanted, 'No Kent State, no Kent State."

State police arrested 23 people outside Memorial Hall after the initial arrests, said Stacey Chase, a University spokeswoman. They sat and laid down behind the bus to prevent the bus from leaving.

John Langford, a 49 year-old student, was the only person arrested yesterday who was also arrested for the Marcus Hall laboratory takeover last Wednesday.

A little before 5 p.m. yesterday, the protesters were warned by Dean of Students Joanne Thomas-Vanin, Vice Chancellor of Research and Graduate Students Sam Conti and Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson that if they chose to remain inside Memorial Hall after 5 o'clock, they would be violating the picketing code and would be arrested for trespassing.

Conti told the graduate student protesters that in addition to arrest, they would be suspended from the University and, if they were teaching assistants, they would lose their jobs.

Hilson said if the protesters chose not to cooperate with the police, they would be charged for disorderly conduct as well.

"I have called the five jails in the area to make sure there's room to accomodate everyone who is arrested," Hilson said.

The protesters formed small groups inside the building to decide who would stay and get arrested and who would leave the building and act as supporters for the others. As supporters, they would post bail and take responsibility for the belongings of those arrested.

Soon after 5 p.m., several protesters left the building.

"I left because it is important to have some people on the outside to support those being arrested," said Jason Rabinowitz, a UMass senior.

"It was a very solemn place when we left," said Diana Ditmore, also arrested last week. "The people inside are extremely serious about the issues. I sensed fear when I left, but it wasn't the overwhelming sense in the room. I think devotion was the overwhelming feeling."

Timothy Belknap (above) and 51 others were arrested yesterday after 29 hours of occupation at Memorial Hall.

There was speculation that the arrested protesters would be brought to Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium to be booked, Associate Dean of Students Ricardo Townes said unofficially. Spokeswoman Chase could not confirm this, as she did not know where the booking took place.

At 9 a.m. yesterday the administration offered to meet with five of the protesters in Whitmore to discuss their demands.

The demands were: that UMass immediately stop all Defense Department research, grant free access to public documents regarding research on campus, reform the Board of Regents and Trustees, give students the binding power over UMass police, re-establish the enrollment of 4,300 freshmen with no tuition or fee increase, a student/faculty study on the effect of military research on the University and a statement from the administration promising not to cooperate with the United States-funded war in El Salvador.

The protesters refused to meet in Whitmore and instead said they wanted to meet as a group with the administration in Memorial Hall.

"The University does not respond to student demands," Hopkins said.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey issued a statement regarding the research policy at UMass yesterday. It said the Research Council, composed of faculty from all areas of the University, endorsed a policy in 1972. The policy said UMass would enter into a grant or contract only when the University has the freedom to fully disclose the purpose, methods, scope and results of the research.

Duffey asked the Research Council to

Mineral named for professor

Jaffe's former student finds new calcium in Namibia

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts geology professor Howard Jaffe describes himself as a marathoner, and now he will not have to run far to find out about the mineral named in his honor.

Jaffeite was discovered by a former student during Jaffe's 1971 stay as a visiting professor at the University of Geneva. Recently, Halil Sarp, assistant curator for minerals at the Swiss Museum of Natural History wrote Jaffe to tell him the new name of the calcium silicate hydroxide mineral he discovered from a rock from Namibia [which borders South Africa].

"He was recognizing my work and honoring me for it. Naturally I was pleased," Jaffe said.

"When one discovers a new mineral, it must be proved unique. In order to gain approval by the International Committee on new minerals, it must have a definite crystal structure, a definite chemical composition and certain optical properties which may be determined through x-rays and microscope work," Jaffe said.

In addition, Jaffe said the most important thing is that the mineral be naturally occurring, or found in nature.

"There are probably about 3,000 discovered minerals today — which is not that many," he said. "There will be more found, but the ones that will be discovered will never be very abundant; they have all been discovered a long time ago."

Jaffe said that a new mineral is most commonly named for a person, but can also be named for a locality or be given a euphonic name by combining the names of the elements it contains.

Jaffe received his Ph.D. at the University of Geneva following graduation from Brooklyn College. Since 1965 he has returned to Geneva three times on sabbatical during which he worked and taught classes at the university in French.

On his most recent leave, 1985-86, Jaffe completed two books entitled, Introduction to Crystal Chemistry and Crystal Chemistry and Refractivity, which were both published in 1988.

"I got into geology primarily because of my love for the outdoors, but I can see myself as a forester or a botanist just as easily as a geologist," Jaffe said.

Jaffe also co-authored a book with his wife Elizabeth, also a geologist, on the geology of the Adirondack mountains. Jaffe said he and his wife have done geological field work there since 1970 and have published papers and journal articles. Recently, he said, they completed a geological map of the Mt. Marcy Quandrangle.

"Geology begins in the field and the maps we make are the starting point of research," Jaffe said. "The different colors we use on the maps outline the different types of rock within the area."

Jaffe said he uses a geological hammer to break off samples, weighing usually one or two pounds. Back in the lab, he said, "we are able to slice those samples very thin and study the minerals under the microscope."

In 1951 Jaffe discovered a new magnesium certium carbonate mineral in a rare earth mineral deposit. Sahamalite, which was named by Jaffe for Finnish geochemist Thure Sahama, has not been found anywhere else in the world [scientists are unable to name the new minerals after themselves].

Budget cuts won't affect transfer students

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Although many groups at the University of Massachusetts will be hurt next fall by the budget cuts, transfer students will not be among them, said Timm Rinehart, director of admissions.

Rinehart said UMass will be accepting nearly 1,200 transfer students for next fall, about the same number accepted this year.

However, the cutbacks in state funding have forced the University to "cut 300 students [from the freshmen class]," he said.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said that in the past the freshman class at UMass has ranged from 4,000 to 4,300 students.

In spite of the cut in the freshman class, the total undergraduate enrollment is expected to remain at about 20,000 students, because the University gives priority to transfer students.

Rinehart said one reason they're cutting freshmen as opposed to transfer students is that "freshmen use more curricular resources."

"They use up courses, like freshman writing, that are in short supply," Rinehart said.

Rinehart said the second reason is demographics.

Duffey urges attendance at hearing

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

The Senate Ways and Means Committee has scheduled a hearing on funding for public higher education Thursday at Central High School in Springfield, Chancellor Joseph Duffey said yesterday.

Duffey said he is encouraging University of Massachusetts students, faculty, alumni and parents to attend the meeting, scheduled to begin at 10:30 a.m.

He said the hearing will be the only chance students have to voice their concerns over current and proposed budget cuts.

"This hearing is very important, because the budget for the University so far [in the House of Representatives] represents another cut," Duffey said.

"I began meeting two weeks ago with various groups on campus — the SGA, the Graduate Student Senate, the Professional Association, the Faculty Senate Rules Committee — and we discussed a strategy for this week," he said. "All the groups are planning some kind of activity to try to get members there to show their support."

Letters have been sent to hundreds of alumni and several thousand parents encouraging their attendance at the hearing, he said. In addition, the Student Government Association has drawn up a ledger, in which those present at the meeting may sign to show their support for higher education, he said.

"There is no funding in the budget at all for libraries or books . . . it could also mean substantially crowded classes," Duffey said. "This past semester, there were more students denied access to classes than in any time in recent history."

Shuttle buses are scheduled to run all day from Haigis Mall to Central High School, starting at 9 a.m., so that students and faculty can be easily transported to the hearing, he said.

Panel endorses BU-Chelsea pact

LAWRENCE (AP) — A wary state Board of Education yesterday endorsed a controversial 10-year plan for Boston University to run Chelsea schools, attaching strings to make the private university more accountable.

The 7-4 vote followed two hours of passionate argument from the public. Chelsea officials and parents said their impoverished city needs BU's rescue. Teachers and Hispanic groups protested that the 300-page plan, as written, runs roughshod over constitutional rights.

Board members also discussed the matter for another hour. Several expressed dismay at the complaints. Others said they were confused about how BU will function as both defacto school committee and manager of the schools.

"It is a flawed agreement and this board is going to be haunted by it for years to come," said board member Sol Kolack, who voted against the plan.

But in the end, a majority apparently agreed with board member Theodore Sylvester, who said, "It's too important a vision to let go."

Earlier, during public comment before the board, which held its monthly meeting here in an elementary school, backers of the plan pleaded for the board's blessing.

"Boston University represents a hope, a dream for us," said School Committee member Bruce Henderson.

"Boston University is our salvation," said PTA leader Rosemary Carlisle.

But Juan Vega, a 1986 Chelsea High School graduate who is now on the Chelsea Commission on Hispanic Affairs, was among Hispanics who complained that BU and city officials have ignored requests for more information and a Spanish translation of the plan. About 50 percent of Chelsea's 3,300 public schoolchildren come from homes of Hispanic origin.

"The picture has been painted of a grinning people ready to go into this plan," Vega said. "But not everybody's real happy."

Others are worried about the meaning of BU president John Silber's statement last month in a speech that a preschool daycare program would reduce "the size of the bilingual problem in Chelsea."

The white shirt has returned with a vengeance.

Everywoman's Center loses program

WWP director leaves

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

Even as staff at the Everywoman's Center celebrates this month's reinstatement of the Counseling Program, they say they regret the cancellation of another program.

The Working Women's Program was terminated indefinitely with the April 7 departure of Kathy Alexander, the program's coordinator, said EWC director Carol Wallace yesterday. A hiring freeze prevents the EWC from filling the position, she said.

Wallace said the EWC Resource and Referral Program will refer women to campus and community agencies, especially regarding counseling and advocacy for victims of sexual harassment. But, she said, the loss of the WWP will create a void.

As for the program's reinstatement, Wallace said, "What I've been told is that the position will remain frozen for now because the condition of the [fiscal year 1990] budget for Student Affairs is not yet known."

> "In some ways the Everywomen's Center is particularly vulnerable because we may not be seen by the administration as being critical to the central mission of the University."
> – Carol Wallace, EWC director

The WWP provided women with education and support services such as labor education, occupational health and safety education and information and advocacy about affirmative action, job stress and sex and race discrimination.

"I think this is a difficult time for the entire campus. Many programs have been unable to fill positions because of the hiring freeze," Wallace said. "In some ways the Everywoman's Center is particularly vulnerable because we may not be seen by the administration as being as critical to the central mission of the University."

A recent report by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office states that most female students report cases of sexual harassment to the EWC as opposed to other campus offices. Wallace said the WWP handled these complaints.

"Other services on campus provide information and advice about sexual harassment," Wallace said, "but the Everywoman's Center is the only agency on campus which provided counseling and advocacy."

She said "A problem [with possible reinstatement of the WWP] is that we're perceived by the administration as primarily a community, not a campus, service."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, who made the final decision to cut Women's Admissions and General Education Services, was not available to comment on the administration's position yesterday.

The WWP and WAGES were the two programs at the EWC through which community women often entered the University, Wallace said. WAGES was cut last semester.

Eighty percent of the women served by the EWC are UMass students. Many community women served by the now-defunct programs eventually entered the University, she added.

Wallace said Alexander resigned from her position to become the director of the Victim and Witness Assistance Program in Northampton.

Wallace said two departures in two semesters is not unusual. "At this point," she said, "I don't think we have any more turnover than any other organization."

Senators to move to relocate Cutback City

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

An attempt to relocate "Cutback City" is scheduled to reach the floor of the Undergraduate Student Senate tonight because several senators claim its influence on state budget cuts decision-making has waned.

The City, which was erected near the campus pond three months ago to symbolize the effects of state budget cuts against public higher education, is comprised of 11 ramshackle huts covered with plastic sheeting and blankets.

Five senators are proposing to recognize and offer thanks to "city" residents for their "commitment and zeal," and move the it to the Statehouse in Boston or elsewhere because it has served its purpose.

The senators claim many students see the city as an "eyesore" and a "hackneyed expression of protest," a contrast to the earlier reaction of curiosity and appreciation.

Former "city" resident Al Arpad, who also ran for student trustee last month, said he left the city because current residents are too disorganized in their efforts to fight the cuts.

"They're having trouble focusing their energies on any kind of act that is likely to reach Boston," Arpad said.

Some residents have switched causes to join the ongoing protest against military funding for University of Massachusetts science projects, he said.

"I hate to crush the hopes of the left-wingers, but I think that gives some indication of what their commitment to state budget cuts really was," Arpad said.

City founders, many of whom have abandoned the city, predicted before Spring Break that the city's population would expand greatly with the advent of warmer weather.

The population, which one peaked at nearly 20 people, has declined in recent weeks to four or five residents.

No one at the city could be reached for comment yesterday afternoon but resident Mark Russ said in an interview last week that the city's fight against budget cuts remains firm, claiming residents have collected more than

Third in a 10-part series on life at the University of Massachusetts

For many University of Massachusetts students, off-campus living is a time of experimentation and learning, and for many, the first time to come to grips with the necessity of planning their diets and eating schedules.

Junior economics major Mary Murdzia is just one of many UMass students who have found their eating habits change drastically after moving off campus.

"I eat more when I'm at home," she said. "I eat more regularly at home. I snack more at home because the house is stocked. Here, I don't have the time or money to eat that way."

Murdzia said that in spite of the difficulties of eating off campus, it is preferable to the dining commons. "I didn't enjoy the atmosphere, cost or food at the dining commons," she said.

"There are fewer high school students applying to UMass," he said. "Therefore, it is easier and less painful to cut them."

On the other hand, Rinehart said the number of transfer students applying to UMass has remained constant.

As far as future cuts, Rinehart said the targets for the fall of 1991 or 1992 have not yet been determined.

"One possibility is to reduce the size of the [freshman] class for the next two or three years," he said.

Rinehart said there has also been some discussion about no longer enabling entering freshmen to pick a specific major in the College of Arts and Sciences.

He said that students would have to go through a more difficult application process, similar to that of the School of Communications.

"The advantages have to do with the internal reallocation of students into particular courses," Rinehart said. "It's a way for students to be better processed in the system."

He added, "This is still in the early discussion stages."

Retention plan sends tuition fees through detour

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

As most everyone on campus knows, the Massachusetts public higher education system is under economic siege because the state is in a fiscal crisis of epic proportions.

Funding for the 29 colleges and universities has been cut and reversions imposed, sending many schools back to 1987 operating budget levels.

Admissions at many schools are being reduced to offset some of the loss and emergency fees being imposed to keep the schools afloat.

Adding to the problem, in the eyes of many faculty and student leaders, is the Board of Regents' tuition retention plan.

Under the plan, tuition at all state colleges and universities is increased and the money generated by the increase, instead of going into the general education coffers of the state, is returned to the campus where it was generated, according to Terry Zoulas, spokesman for the Board of Regents.

Under tuition retention, students pay their bills to the University as normal but when the money gets to the state treasury it is separated into different accounts, one for general education funds and one for tuition retention dollars, he said.

Schools then receive the portion of the tuition retention account they generated. The money is paid to the school as it is paid into the account, he said.

The first tuition increase to fall under the plan was last year's 8.3 percent hike which generated about $3 million in revenue for the University of Massachusetts, said Jim Leheny, associate chancellor.

This year's proposed increase of 7.7 percent, if approved by the Board at their May 9 meeting, is expected to create about the same amount, he said.

The regents and UMass administrators see this in a positive light, saying that the extra money will help state funded schools continue to provide quality, affordable education.

But Stephanie Orefice, UMass student trustee, says the whole issue of increasing tution and retaining it sends the wrong message to state legislators, giving them a green light to under fund the University.

She contends that legislators see the money generated by tuition increases going to the campuses and they then feel freer to cut additional amounts from the higher education budget.

"For all intents and purposes, the state is using [tuition retention] as a substitute for state dollars," she said.

> '. . . this institution has a public mission. It is a land grant institution, not an institution for the privileged . . . we think tuition retention serves the interest of two groups and does not serve our interest.'
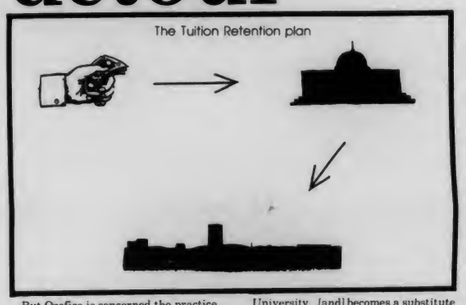
> – Vice President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors Bruce Laurie

Last year, the state cut about 4.1 percent from higher education's budget after the tuition increase was approved by the Board of Regents, Zoulas said.

Zoulas said this was not normally the way things are done but because Governor Dukakis was to be nominated for president that coming Saturday, legislators were under additional pressure to balance the budget quickly.

"If it were any other year, we would have gotten our state appropriation and the tuition retention," he said.



But Orefice is concerned the practice will be continued indefinitely, regardless of the political and economic conditions in the state.

"The administration was selling us on tuition retention because it was going to give us all this extra money," she said. But "if the legislation goes through – we get tuition retention in bad times as well as good. It's very hard to get it repealed once it gets institutionalized."

"So, if you're talking five or six years down the road and the state is in good times, the state is not going to say 'okay, let's overturn the tuition retention law," she said.

Bruce Laurie, vice president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and a labor historian, recently drafted a position statement, which the MSP adopted at their March 28 meeting, arguing against tuition retention .

The MSP consider tuition retention "unwise and harmful to the University" because "[it] encourages increases in tuition, thus threatening access to the University...[and] becomes a substitute for state appropriated funds and a pretext for cutting support of the University."

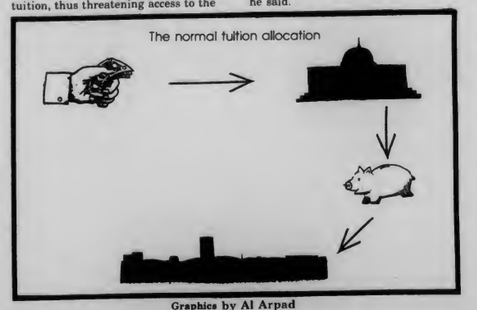
The Board of Regents refute these claims, saying the tuition retention plan is part of an overall strategy to raise tuition to 30 percent of the cost of educating a student, Zoulas said.

The 30 percent figure was not pulled out of a hat but taken from a Carnegie Foundation report which said students in the public higher education sector should pay this amount, Zoulas said.

This plan would have been implemented regardless of the budget crisis, he said.

"What happened because of the budget crisis is the state said we are going to use some of this money to fill in the gaps," he said.

Laurie has doubts about how much the budget crisis affected the decision to use this money to make up the difference in the higher education budget, he said.



Graphics by Al Arpad

He said the MSP adopted the position because "we think [tuition retention] serves the interest of two groups and does not serve our interest," he said referring to private colleges and Universities and the legislature.

"It serves the legislature because it lets them off the hook. Legislators are looking to save money and they think they can pass that off onto parents and students," he said.

> 'There are people at this school who are working almost full-time jobs because the fees are going up so much. At UMass/ Boston, it may be the amount of their welfare checks and they may not be able to feed their children for the week.'
> – Stephanie Orefice

"This is an invitation to the legislature to underfund the University," he said.

The reason he believes the privates "want tuition to increase [at public schools] is to decrease and possibly eliminate the public's competitive advantage" they have when recruiting students, he said.

Orefice also argued against tuition retention on philosophical grounds, claiming the duty of the state is to pay the educational costs of public institutions.

Laurie said, "this institution has a public mission. It serves the interests of the commonwealth. It is a land grant institution, not an institution for the privileged."

Orefice is concerned that UMass will go the way of other public schools, such as the University of Vermont, which has tuition retention and an out of state population that makes up 60 percent of the student body.

Orefice also points out that of the top ten most expensive land grant institutions, the top nine all retain tuition, she said.

She is worried that the state's higher education system will become too costly for those it was set up to serve.

"There are people at this school who are working almost full-time jobs because the fees are going up so much," she said. "At UMass/Boston, it may be the amount of their welfare check and they may not be able to feed their children for the week."

Zoulas said there are provisions in the plan to help those students who cannot afford the tuition increases through relaxed state financial aid guidlines.

Right now, he said, UMass is about in the middle of the cost scale for schools of equal caliber in the Northeast with the University of Vermont at the top with a tuition of $3726 and University of Maine at the bottom with a tuition of $1936.

UMass' tuition used in this 1988-89 comparison, was $2467. The proposed 7.7 percent increase of $108 would raise the cost to $2575.

All the above numbers include fees at the schools, he said.

All in all, Leheny said, no one in administration is in favor of raising the cost of attending the University because a tution program is in place but he pointed out that money needs to be generated somewhere.

"I don't think that there are many people on this campus that think tuition retention is a gold mine [of revenue], Leheny said.

"I'm not for increasing tuition and tuition retention, but I think the situation we find ourselves in is a necessary one."

DISTINGUISHED FACULTY LECTURE SERIES

You are cordially invited to attend a special lecture by Dena F. Dincauze of the Department of Anthropology entitled "The Gardeners of Eden"

Modern understanding of the deleterious effects of civilization on the environments of this planet has fostered nostalgia for "wilderness." Prehistoric archaeology reveals the complexities of human relationships to biological and physical systems through a million years before cities. Long-term perspectives demonstrate that human evolution is inextricable from the dynamism of the planetary systems.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Everyday hazards

There is a certain amount of risk involved in many activities people do on a daily basis. Take eating, for example. People must worry about getting cancer from consuming apples, high cholesterol from consuming steak, botulism from consuming grapes, etc.

When you stand in a schoolyard or in line at a fast food resaurant, you don't know when some psychopath is going to cut you down with an AK-47.

Lisa Hamelin

You can't go on a plane trip any more without having a queasy stomach. Surely, the outdated and ill-maintained airliner will fall apart like a '70 Oldsmobile Starfire or be the target of some terrorists' plastic explosives.

However, none of these activities entail as much risk as driving an automobile. There are cautious, law-abiding motorists, but there are also an alarmingly high percentage of drivers who make me wonder if the registry is far too lenient in driving licenses. These drivers include those who run stop signs and red lights, pull out when oncoming cars are very close, pass in no passing zones, tailgate, and generally risk the lives and raise the ire of good drivers.

No matter how vigilant and quick a good driver is to stamp on the brake or swerve, there are some accidents that can't be avoided. Witness the case of my cousin in New Jersey. She put on her signal and slowed down to turn into her driveway. Suddenly, she was back-ended by a Buick sedan. Had she not been wearing a seatbelt, she would have been hurled through her windshield.

As it was, she ended up with severe whiplash and a totalled car. The woman who hit her was not the slightest bit intoxicated or drugged. She was busy gabbing with her husband and wasn't paying attention to her driving or the car in front of her. The back end of my cousin's car bore a striking resemblance to an accordion. Fortunately, she didn't have her children in the care with her. I hope that stupid woman who hit her learned a lesson.

While drunk driving causes many tragic accidents, many can also be attributed to pure stupidity.

Once, on my daily trip from Ware to Amherst, I decided to count the number of traffic violations I witnessed. My results were alarming. Six people ran stop signs, four people ran red lights, and three people passed other cars in no passing zones.

To top it all off, a guy in a pickup truck was tail-gaiting me through Ware and most of Belchertown — even though I was going about 10 miles above the speed limit. One of the drivers who ran a stop sign made me leave a rubber strip about thirty feet long and made my heart do 140 beats a minute.

Had I been a cop in an unmarked car, I would have made quite a fortune for the state of Massachusetts.

The tragedy of neglect

Tell a foreigner about the United States, and he or she are likely to envision skyscrapers, crowds waiting for traffic lights to turn green so they can cross the street, and yellow taxis cruising up and down four-lane boulevards.

Pedro Pereira

Although the big-city picture is accurate, foreigners usually can't envision that which we can but have learned to ignore: poverty, crime, homelessness, and dilapidated buildings.

Since the first half of the 20th century, moving up the social ladder has meant relocating to the suburbs. Many jobs have followed the residents out of the city, leaving behind boarded-up, empty buildings and low-income people who give in to hopelessness.

Although unemployment affects whites, it disproportionately hurts Blacks, Hispanics, and other minorities who fill the central cities, where poverty abounds. Minorities find moving out of the cities especially hard, even when they become able to financially, because of discrimination. Those who move to the suburbs have insured that the "lower classes" don't follow them, by using zoning laws (which in many cases are disguised legalized racism).

In addition, abandoning poverty has become an apparently impossible prospect. While in the 1970's, people were rising out of poverty at a 37 percent rate, in the 1980's the rate has declined to 23 percent.

The obstacles cause hopelessness, which in turn causes crime and violence. Inner-city youths who feel they can't better their lives and get an education, find comfort in the abuse and traffic of drugs.

This produces disastrous results, as the 6 o'clock news proves just about every day. Washington D.C., followed by other big cities such as Chicago and Los Angeles, faithfully illustrate the violent and criminal results of inner-city hopelessness.

Although urban conditions are reaching crisis proportions, the federal government still fails to come to the rescue. Aid to the cities in 1980 was $91.5 billion, but the package has decreased to $70.6 billion.

As if that weren't enough, suburbanization, besides causing unemployment and poverty, has ruined the cities' tax base. Municipalities acquire revenue mostly from the property tax, based on the assessed value of property. But when so much property has so little value in the inner cities, and entire commercial districts in downtown areas are boarded up, the cities are left without revenue sources.

The fiscal crisis has proved particularly acute in large cities, which depend heavily on commercial districts and industry for revenue.

In the 1970's, New York City faced a precarious situation as a result of the decentralization of the garment and printing industries. The city ran up a large deficit, for which it tried to compensate by borrowing money. But when the city paid for the borrowed money with more borrowed money the situation worsened.

Unless the federal and state governments begin cooperating with local governments to find ways to improve the cities' financial situation and make them attractive again, homeless, poverty and all the accompanying problems will likely continue to grow.

Nothing to be proud of

About two weeks ago on a damp, dreary morning, I stood in front of Memorial Hall. The stone and brick building usually goes unnoticed. Yet as the cold wind blew and others hurried by, I stopped to look.

As I read the names of American battles and wars inscribed above the windows, the names of Normandy, Argonne, Saint Mihile, Guadalcanal, Korea and Vietnam did not bring to mind the soldier fighting to save this great nation. Instead, I thought of history class.

Gayle Long

History does not teach compassion, remorse or grief. War teaches these things — after they happen. The 24,330 American deaths suffered at Guadalcanal during World War II in the Pacific, and the 33,720 fatalities tallied in the Korean War are facts.

The grief and sense of loss faced by each of these soldier's families are not thought of or discussed in a history class.

I looked again at Memorial Hall. Maybe I hoped for some sense of feeling. Patriotic, solemn, some definite emotion. Yet, nothing was there but emptiness. I did not hear the ticker-tape parade for the war heroes, nor the final breath being taken by a dying soldier in a deserted foxhole. There were no tears to shed for the family and friends of the GI who fought for the love of country or cheers when a couple was re-united.

Along the top of this monument is the saying, "We will keep faith with you that lie asleep." To remember the dead is a tradition. Honoring the dead with a memorial is likewise, a tradition. The symbolic value of Memorial Hall is vague. Are we only to keep faith with the dead? Are we to glorify war, those dead because of war, and war itself? If the hall was not built to glorify war, then why does it not believe in the living?

Memorials will continue to be erected in memory of the war dead. Perhaps, eventually the purpose of recalling past glories will be forgotten. War is nothing to be proud of. The next war will not be fought with conventional weapons, and will most likely destroy the world as we know it. Existence of the human race depends upon the push for peace by all people, not war by those who will not compromise.

There may even be a way to remember the past and hope for the future while walking past Memorial Hall. Look closely at the building. There are still windows above which nothing is written. These windows are not transparent as most panes of glass are. The future is clouded to those that fought and died.

I doubt that should another war take place, the survivors will engrave the battle sites above the windows.

For that matter, I doubt that there will be a Memorial Hall, or anything else to look at.

Different realities to different people

"I was beamed up to the spaceship and was told an urgent message from a visitor." "They operated on my brain and forced me to have sex with them."

These startling yet true accounts of alien beings can be quite convincing. In the New Age climate of the 1980's, Whitley Strieber's Communion and other true best-sellers have fueled the acceptance of the pervasive myths of UFO visions and alien abductions.

Such tales arise not from the extra-terrestrial world but from the inner depths of the human psyche. Those who write and accept such accounts as truth possess fantasy-prone personalities. They are highly suggestible and imaginative and can fabricate in vivid detail. These people believe in what they are thinking and saying can be extremely convincing.

This phenomenon can be extended to non-extra-terrestrial situations as well. Take for instance your chronic liar — his truth is simply the result of his manipulation of the external environment to fit his perception of reality. He does not know he is lying. For him, he speaks the truth.

Beliefs in UFO's or other "realities" are not damaging by themselves, but when those beliefs are transformed into self-destructive or other-destructive actions, something is amiss. Fantasies tend to express what, we have civilized, harnessed, transformed and tamed, and for good reason!

The consequences can be astounding when one cannot separate fantasy from reality, fact from fiction.

How many of us remember George Reeves, the original Superman character who could not separate his real identity from the Superman identity and ended up committing suicide? Remember Charles Manson who imagined innocent people as being his anti-establishment enemies, eliminating them before he was eliminated? Remember Adolf Hitler, a man-god, who spoke the truth about the inferiority of non-Aryans?

Scott Green

It is clear that our subjective truth can be used as a means of justification for our actions. Misunderstandings, quarrels, divorces and wars are the result of the my truth is better than your truth syndrome. This is a spin-off of the because my friends say so, my nation says so, because God is on our side - just look in the revisionist history books, look in the Bible - it's all right there in black and white syndrome.

We may find justification for our personal realities through interpretation of the outside environment.

Have you ever asked witnesses of a car accident what happened? You would receive numerous descriptions of the incident. Individuals who have read a book or have met a certain person will each give you a distinct account of the experience. It is the same accident, same book, same person, yet existentially different.

Justification can also be found internally. Socialized attitude and beliefs, internalized parental values, past experiences and future expectations all fuse together to form a world of truth "according to Garp".

Everyone's reality is their own truth. My truth may be different from yours, but I am not right, and you are not wrong. What is real for you does not make my reality any less truthful.

As healthy adults, we should discover that the opposite of a very important truth may be another important truth.

If you are a fisherman, become the fish, if you are the fish, become the fisherman. Learn to look at life through a different lens.

The next time you tell me that your grass is greener, your flowers are brighter and your garden is healthier, catch yourself. One day, you will come to the conclusion that your soil is not in fact richer — it is just dirt, like mine.

review the guidelines in light of questions which have been raised about some research projects. He said the Research Council would report back to him at a upcoming meeting.

He said the research funded by the Defense Department will not be negotiated as long as "the scope, methods and results of such research can fully and freely be disclosed."

There were several new faces in Memorial Hall that were not there at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

"They broke into a window in the rest room, they could have been arrested for trespassing," said Hilson.

The protesters invited faculty members from UMass, Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College and other people who had a vested interest in the issue to a meeting at noon yesterday. Sara Lennox, Ann Ferguson, Terisa Turner and John Brentlinger were among the UMass faculty to attend the meeting. Turner, a part-time women's studies lecturer, stayed throughout the day and was arrested.

A little before 1 p.m. yesterday, bathroom facilities were denied to the protesters, and food could no longer be brought into the building.

"Our vein of communication has been cut," said Pierre LaLiberte. "If they can't use the bathroom in five minutes, we're going in."

After a countdown, more than 12 people rushed into the hall.

The 52 people arrested will be arraigned today or tommorrow. A public meeting is scheduled for 8 p.m. tonight at the Bangs Community Center. Anthrax research at UMass will be discussed.

ARTS & LIVING

Coltrane's legend lies dead but not remembered

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

Taking a cue from some friends of mine who visited Elvis' grave at Graceland during Spring Break, I decided to visit the grave of my favorite musician: John Coltrane. Rather than being a huge tourist attraction like Graceland, Coltrane's grave is a simple metal plaque in the ground at Pinelawn Memorial Park, Farmingdale, Long Island. The people in the cemetary office had no idea who he was or why I should want to visit him.

This is yet another example of the neglect of Blacks who have contributed so much to American music and culture. Europeans treat their musical giants with much reverance: the annual Mozart festival in Salzburg, Austria, and Beethoven's birthplace in Bonn, West Germany, both attract visitors from all over the world. In America, great Black music is not accorded the "institutional" acknowledgement that European and White American music is.

I observed another example of this last July 4th on the Esplanade in Boston. The Boston Pops played a concert of Irving Berlin's music, celebrating his 100th birthday. The concert was free, financed by the contributions of corporations, government and the rich White establishment, and was heard by a quarter of a million people over an expensive, elaborate sound system. Meanwhile, several blocks down from the Hatch Shell, a small jazz group wailed away, playing to a few dozen onlookers and people standing in line for sno-kones. They passed the hat.

Of the millions of dollars corporate America contributes to the arts each year, only a small percentage is given to jazz and other Black-originated art forms. Jazz programs at colleges and universities are still small in number. Most acknowledgement of jazz nowadays is ephermal and/or relatively unknown. Examples of ephemera include the movie Bird, celebrating Charlie Parker, and various programs on this country's few jazz radio stations commemorating Duke Ellington's 90th birthday this month. Recent developments such as New York's American Jazz Orchestra and Philadelphia's Duke Ellington Youth Orchestra are neither firmly established nor widely recognized. Coltrane's house in Philly has been made into a makeshift museum, but it's not even listed in the phone book. The overall situation is slowly improving, but it's got a long way to go.

Of course, John Coltrane was one of the most influential American musicians ever, but his contribution went far beyond mere entertainment; some have equated his social and political influence with that of Malcolm X. He didn't talk much, but his music and lifestyle sent a strong message to Blacks that they could aspire to a better existence. His clean living and spiritual orientation did more than anyone else to help dispel the stereotype of the Black musician as junkie or "low-lifer." There is even a church in San Francisco where Coltrane is worshipped as a god.

Despite his enormous influence, institutional America has not seen fit to memorialize John Coltrane. All we have left by which to remember him are some recordings that are produced by companies who are more interested in making a profit, a museum in Philly that no one seems to know about, and a small metal plaque in Farmingdale, Long Island that reads, simply, "Coltrane, John W., 1926-1967."

News from the Deadline: heavy Dylan dose in early shows

By JACK THOMPSON
Collegian Correspondent

What if you knew an artist who was helping another artist paint an old school bus? Wouldn't that hit you with some flash of Cowboy Neal at the Wheel? What if the mailman brings you the latest Golden Road, and there's an extensive article about Neal Cassady? What if that same artist mentioned above wanted you to read Didion's Slouching Towards Bethlehem, and the Yeats poem at the beginning describes your life exactly at that moment? Wouldn't you feel like the vibes were echoing, just a touch?

A few years back, some friends and I had tix to a Providence Dead show. My friend had a semi-band together, and they were covering Dead tunes. At a pre-show party, they played a long, weird, full-of-feedback "Truckin." We do the trip down to Providence, and of course, the Dead do a long, strange, three-dimensional-feedbacky "Truckin." Too much. Another example of vibes, and all the various levels at work on the scene.

Moving closer to the present, according to a recent Billboard Magazine Concert Boxscore, the Dead were tops for the last week of March this year, with two shows each in Atlanta and Greensboro N.C.

And, according to the most recent Golden Road, the Dead have been playing a LOT of Dylan tunes. Here's just a few: "Queen Jane Approximately," "Stuck Inside of Mobile (with the Memphis Blues)," "Knockin' On Heaven's Door." Of course, if you've heard the Dylan/Dead release, then you know some of what they're doing. By the way, the rumor mill says outdoor shows this summer at SPAC and Foxboro, so keep your ears open for mail order dates. The GD East Coast Hotline is 201-777-8653 . . . Dead ahead.

■ off-campus eating

"At home everyone always ate together and at the same time," junior English major Sue Rosa said. "It didn't matter if you were busy. Everything else stopped. It's according to convenience now."

"I usually eat while I'm walking or studying," she said. "I can't remember the last time I sat down just to eat."

Like other students, Rosa said she frequently ate spaghetti. "It's quick, it's easy, nutritious and it's cheap," she said.

Easy-to-prepare meals are the most popular with students, and because of affordability, most students prefer packaged products, such as oriental noodle soup and macaroni and cheese.

"I usually don't eat spaghetti," said senior psychology major Lisa Robarts, "because then you have to heat two things up. You have to heat the sauce."

Robarts said she favors simpler, one-burner foods, such as oriental noodles and macaroni and cheese.

Students said their food shopping budgets ranged from $10 to $30 per week. Chicken, hamburger and bagels are among the items most commonly purchased, but students said they had to learn to prioritize the way they spent their low incomes.

"My budget is very low," said senior marketing major Chris Johnson. "I'm trying to spend my money on bills instead of food."

Most students said that they cooked with pots and pans, but the few who did use microwaves to cook relied upon them heavily.

"I use the microwave for almost everyting but meat," said fashion marketing major Lisa Rodrigues. "I even heat water in it."

Many off-campus students said they often ate lunches on campus for convenience because they did not have enough time to go home between classes. While many students said they brought fruit and other snacks from home to eat on campus, few brought entire lunches.

In fact, students said they have a hard time including nutritious foods in their diet, no matter where they are in the area. Living off campus, many students said they include more junk food in their diets than they would normally at home.

"I can't pass up cheese doodles," said senior HRTA major Loui Roughgarden. "I'm graduating, and when I go home, my mother's going to kill me. I've got to change my eating habits."

■ the Jaffe mineral

Jaffe said he was also the first to describe how the element yttrium exists in garnet. Jaffe said he devised a recipe which led to the development of YAG (yttrium aluminum garnet), a synthetic garnet [silicate minerals used as gemstones or abrasives]. Today, it is used in the YAG-laser, which is used for eye surgery, he said.

"Many years ago YAG was sold as a synthetic gem, as it resembles the diamond, but has since been replaced by the less expensive cubic zirconia," Jaffe said.

Though YAG and another synthetic, YIG — widely used in radar devices — have found their way into the marketplace, Jaffe said the scientist doesn't make a profit for explaining the science of the discovery.

Jaffe, who celebrated his 70th birthday several weeks ago, said it was important to be in good physical health when climbing the mountains he surveys.

To keep fit, Jaffe began running marathons 13 years ago. By 1984, Jaffe had run 30 marathons, with a personal best of 3:07 at the Swiss Championship race.

"I could have retired," he said. "If I had, my wife said I'd be underfoot around the house. I like what I'm doing and the students keep me from growing up too fast."

Canadiens eliminate Bruins, 3-2

MONTREAL (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens avenged last year's playoff elimination by Boston, riding the goaltending of Patrick Roy and a strong defense to the Adams Division title with a 3-2 victory over the Bruins last night.

Montreal, which was 11-1-1 against Boston in the regular season and playoffs, advances to meet the Patrick Division survivor. Pittsburgh leads Philadelphia in that series, 3-2.

Each result in this five-game series was by one goal. Roy was the winning goalie in the four Montreal victories and now is 30-0-4 at the Forum since losing to Boston in the 1988 Adams playoff clincher. He made 22 saves last night as the Canadiens re-established their domination of the Bruins in the playoffs — they have won 21 of the last 23 postseason matchups.

Stephane Richer got the winning goal at 4:14 of the third period when he took a rebound off the stick of goalie Andy Moog, spun around and put in a backhander. That made it 3-1 and was enough to withstand Bob Joyce's second goal of the game, at 7:31 on a 25-footer.

Joyce had given Boston a 1-0 lead in the first period, completing a 2-on-1 break with Craig Janney by scoring on a 20-foot shot.

Chris Chelios tied it 4:13 into the second period when he came out from behind the net with the puck and, through a screen, beat Moog between the pads from short range.

"I tell the offense they've got to try and control the ball. They're always pushing for transition," Garber said. "If we don't have it we force it and then we're back on defense. We're playing too much defense."

But today's game may be enough inspiration for them to knock the hosts right out of their izods. The grapevine has told Garber that freshman goaltender Chris Miller (.590 save percentage, 8.8 goals against) can be had easily, which may be the wake-up call the offense needs.

Leading the attack for the Crimson are attackmen Mick Cavuoti and Steve Lux, each with 11 goals and 15 assists. Quality players, but the only serious threats as Harvard uses primarily 10 players. Garber is hoping the depth of his team will be enough to make the difference, and bring the trophy back to Amherst again.

cant team (hint, hint: the Gorillas are ranked sixth this week, which pretty much fits the job description).

Throw in the fact that Haah-vud thrives on sticking its noses high at the expense of the ol' state school, and you've got a recipe for a great match even Julia Child couldn't top.

"We are one of their chief antagonists. There's no question they'll be ready," Garber said. "UMass-Harvard is an intense rivalry, particularly since no one [from New England] has beaten us in four years."

But then again, UMass isn't exactly about to stand around like cardboard cutouts. The Gorilla offense hasn't been clicking like it should in the past few games, trying too hard to fast break and pressing the ball in the offensive end.

■ softball

Aprile proved it to be more than enough.

Throughout the rest of the game Aprile was in control. Central Connecticut never got a player farther than second as Aprile struck out seven batters while giving up just two hits and two walks. Freshman Jen Devlin came on with one out in the seventh to get the last two batters.

The first game also saw some nice defense as catcher Cherie DellAnno threw out three would-be stealers and Barbara Meehan made a sliding catch.

Game two was a much closer affair, as UMass was forced to eight innings to get the win. In the top of the third, the Blue Devils made a big threat to score. Chris Wanner walked three batters to load the bases, but then escaped damage by getting Lori Emunson to fly to right to end the inning.

The game would stay scoreless as Aprile came on in the top of the fifth to relieve Wanner, who pitched four good innings, giving up only one hit and three walks. Meehan made another nice diving catch in the sixth to help keep Central at zero.

There were plenty of small threats in the seventh and eighth innings, but UMass would get the job done in the bottom of the eighth. Miller led off with a single to the hole between third and short. Kathy Pugliese ran for Miller and Meehan sacrificed her to second, but the Central catcher threw the ball into the dirt. By the time they finished throwing the ball around, Pugliese stood on third and Meehan on second.

On the next play, third baseman Chris Collins hit a ground ball to short and when the CC first baseman couldn't handle the throw, Pugliese came home with the winning run for UMass.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

Diamond teams turn back Central Conn.

• Minutemen explode from slump to post 11-3 win over Blue Devils

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

All the frustration that had built up inside the University of Massachusetts baseball team over the past eight games exploded yesterday at Lorden Field, and the unlucky team to be facing the Minutemen at the time was Central Connecticut State University.

UMass, losers of six of its last eight going into yesterday's game, responded by banging out 14 hits against the Blue Devils to improve to 16-18 with an 11-3 win.

"It feels real good to get a win against them," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "They are one of the top six teams in New England and we were struggling."

Senior righty Jeff Richardson pitched a complete game to lead the Minutemen past Central Connecticut, 11-3 yesterday at Lorden Field.

UMass will try to keep the hits coming today in its 3 p.m. game at Amherst College. All nine players in the starting lineup had hits against CCSU, and the Minutemen got nine of their hits in the third and fifth innings, when they rallied for four and six runs, respectively.

Most of the damage was inflicted on Blue Devil starter Joe Rich, who dropped to 3-1 with his first loss of the season.

"Their guy wasn't worse than any of the other pitchers we've faced this year," Stone said. "For some reason, we just started hitting today."

UMass made five errors, but Kevin Correa, playing out of position at shortstop, made two of them. Correa had to play short since starter Glen DiSarcina was ejected after instigating a brawl with Rutgers on Sunday. A player ejected for fighting is automatically suspended for his team's next game.

But yesterday's hitting more than offset the fielding, and gave UMass' Jeff Richardson a win in his first start of the season.

"We needed a good pitching performance and Richardson did the job," Stone said.

The senior righty scattered five hits, two of them solo home runs, struck out one and walked one, while improving to 1-1.

CCSU's Mike Sciortino tied the game 1-1 with a home run down the rightfield line, and two UMass errors helped the Blue Devils go up 2-1 in the third. But after the Minutemen's third-inning outburst, Bruce Ferrone's blast to right in the eighth meant almost nothing.

With two outs in the third, Steve Kern tripled to right center to get things going. After Drew Comeau walked, Brian Bright beat out an infield single to score Kern and send Comeau to second.

Singles by Lou Olivieri and Dave Edwards scored Bright and Comeau, and moments later, Kern scored on the back end of a double steal to give UMass a 5-2 lead.

The Minutemen improved on that performance in the fifth when they rallied for six runs.

Comeau reached on catcher's interference to begin the inning, and Bright and Olivieri followed with textbook hit-and-run singles to right and left, respectively, to score Comeau.

A bunt single by Edwards loaded the bases, and Tom Murray then singled to left to deliver Bright. No. 9 hitter Correa's single to center scored Olivieri and Edwards to make it 9-2.

Murray scored on a wild pitch and Correa eventually scored on a Drew Seccafico sacrifice fly to finish the UMass scoring.

"It was a real important win for us," Stone said. "We did some things well and got some confidence."

• Softball team gets sweep in doubleheader

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Correspondent

When you're hot, you're hot. That is the feeling on the University of Massachusetts softball team these days.

Yesterday, under sunny skies and with a light wind, UMass won its 10th in a row and 15th of its last 19 by shutting out Central Connecticut State University for a 5-0, 1-0 doubleheader sweep at Totman Field.

The team will look to continue the streak today against the University of Rhode Island. The teams will play a pair of make-up games at Totman, the first one scheduled for 3 p.m.

"We're a very young team . . . we knew it was a matter of time if we kept doing things well, if we continue to execute," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

In the first game, UMass scored all its runs in the second inning. Holly Aprile, the UMass pitcher, helped her own cause by leading off the inning with a blast over the left fielder's head for a double. She was sacrificed to third, and remained there as Mary Duff reached on the first of her four bunt singles on the afternoon.

Chris Wanner's two-strike single scored Aprile, and after a steal of second and a walk, Jen Miller stepped up to the plate and knocked a grand slam that landed in the grass over the left field fence. UMass had a 5-0 lead and

Men's tennis downs Springfield

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

The sun shined brightly on the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team as it swept a 6-3 win under the rug against Springfield College yesterday.

The Minutemen had a 3-3 score after the singles play, with the three wins coming from number one Brian Gable, fifth singles Humberto Soto and sixth singles Matt Murphy.

"It was touch and go at first, but we came off with three of the singles. We needed two of the doubles in order to take the match. We took three," said UMass coach Manny Roberts.

The Minutemen poured on the energy and mental toughness and snagged all three doubles matches from Springfield.

Gable and Chris Johnson, at first doubles, played a grueling match winning with a score of 4-6, 7-6 (7-5), 7-6 (7-3).

"These guys were our total rivals. We lost to them last year in the New Englands. My goal was to beat them today," said Gable. "We were down after the first set, but came back.

"Chris played well in the second and third sets, in fact the best doubles I've seen him play this season," Gable said.

With a boosted morale, the Minutemen hope to add another win today as they travel to Storrs, Conn. to face the University of Connecticut.

Men's lax at Harvard, looking to clinch NE title

By JIM CLARK

The silver cup sits atop University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Dick Garber's desk.

Engraved on it are the past winners of the New England title, a sort of generic moniker decided merely on the basis of a team's regular season record against common New England opponents. But upon close scrutiny, it can be noticed that the champion for the last four years is missing from the trophy.

"That's because we've had it here ever since," Garber quipped.

Well, not exactly. UMass is the last name that can be found, having taken the pot of gold in 1984. Brown University stole it in 1985 before UMass rallied to sweep the last three years.

Today, the cup will make the journey with the Minutemen to Harvard University for a 3 p.m. clash in Cambridge, and the scenario is simple. With a loss, UMass could possibly forfeit its stranglehold on the regional dominance, but a win safely tucks the prize away in Boyden for another year.

It won't be a matter of Gorillas hoisting it high over head and prancing around the field, a la Mark Messier or Mike Bossy circling the ice with the cherished Stanley Cup in hockey. But it is a nice sidelight, and good incentive for UMass.

It's possible that UMass can take it even with a loss today, as Harvard still has to face Ivy foe Yale (seems they always manage to slip that game in at the end of the schedule, no matter what sport it is), but it's safe to say the Gorillas would like to solve matters once and for all this afternoon.

To do that they will be facing a Crimson team that, simply put, confuses the mind. They broke out of the block like gangbusters, taking five of their first six games including a 13-9 upset of league rival Pennsylvania, and reached as high as seventh in the national poll.

But somewhere in there, Harvard got its face slapped by a 10-9 loss to St. John's, which kicked the horse out from under them. That setback was the start of a string of four losses that has the Crimson at a less-than-appealing 5-5 record and a disappearance from national consideration.

In order for Harvard to have any iota of a shot of making the playoffs, it would have to rebound against a signifi-

40 protesters arraigned; 21 more to follow

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

After spending the night in jail, 40 demonstrators were arraigned yesterday morning in Hampshire District Court for charges stemming from their two-day occupation of Memorial Hall at the University of Massachusetts. Pre-trial conferences have been scheduled for September.

UMass police arrested 61 people early Tuesday evening following the occupation, a protest of military-funded research at the University. The number of detainees, reported at 52 yesterday, was misstated by University officials because of confusion during the initial arrest, said UMass spokeswoman Jean Hopkins.

Judge Alvertus Morse, who presided over the arraignment, ordered a court officer to clear the hallway outside the courtroom because supporters of the protesters were cheering and making too much noise.

The remaining 21 people are scheduled to be arraigned today and tomorrow.

Assistant District Attorney Fredric Bartmon suggested that the pre-trial conference dates be scheduled for September because, "of the unpredictability of availability of students during the summer recess. Everyone has more time to organize."" "I am very grateful with assistant District Attorney's decision, he was acting on behalf of the students," said Cristobal Bonifaz, who is defending the 61 protesters free of charge, in addition to the seven who were arrested last week in a similar takeover of a laboratory in Marcus Hall.

Twenty-four of the protesters were charged with trespassing, 16 for being disorderly persons and one was charged for a being a disorderly person and for assault and battery to a police officer, according to court documents.

Thirty-two of the people arrested are UMass undergraduate students, 26 are non-students and three were UMass graduate students, Hopkins said. She said the three graduate students have been suspended from the University.

The 61 protesters who were arrested were brought to Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium and booked. The 29 demonstrators arrested inside the hall were charged with trespassing and 32 others were charged with being disorderly persons, according to Hopkins.

Tuesday night, the protesters who did not post $15 bail were transported to Hampshire County House of Correction, Hopkins said.

The 40 who were arraigned yesterday did not post bail and spent the night in jail, she said.

"We were taken to jail on a PVTA bus that said it was a "Special Tour," said Jonathon Leavitt, one of the people arrested. "We continued our "Special Tour" this morning to the courthouse. Our "Special Tour" was alive and full of spirit, it was great, we helped lift the spirits of those who were starting to get down."

The demonstrators said they would protest until their demands — including an end to all Department of Defense sponsored research on campus — are met by the administration. "I can see a lot of mischievous activity on the part of our group," Leavitt said. "We started as a group of seven doing the research, and then seven more got arrested. Now 80 are radicalized, if we're arrested again, who knows, maybe there will be 100s."

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said: "We have a policy that we don't do classified research at UMass."

Madson called one of the demands, re-establishing 4,300 freshmen with no tuition increase, ironic. "I want the freshmen enrollment back up too, but we were forced to use state money for the use of state police. You can't spend money more than once."

Body found near stadium

A man's body was found yesterday at around 11:30 a.m. in a thicket near the main entrance of Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, said Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety at the University of Massachusetts.

Two physical plant ground crew workers were collecting paper when they discovered the body, Hilson said. The workers notified UMass police.

A medical examiner was called to transport the body to Muncipal Hospital in Springfield where an autopsy was performed at 4 p.m., police said.

An investigation is being conducted by UMass police and the Hampshire County District Attorney's office, according to University spokeswoman Jeanne Hopkins.

The man was identified by police, but they cannot disclose his name until the next of kin is notified.

Protesters disrupt SGA meeting

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

About 150 activists protesting military-funded research at the University of Massachusetts and a recent proposal to relocate "Cutback City" launched a five minute demonstration at last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

Holding signs and raising their fists, the protesters chanted "organize and mobilize, save Cutback City," a shantytown erected three months ago to protest state budget cuts to public higher education. The demonstrators then marched to a hearing at the Bangs Community Center on Anthrax research.

The protest marks the third in a series of student outbursts against military-funded research on campus, including last week's occupation of a Marcus Hall microwave laboratory and Monday's sit-in at Memorial Hall.

Diana Ditmore, a City resident who was also arrested during the Marcus Hall occupation, said relocating the City would only weaken protests by separating the interrelated issues of state budget cutbacks and military-funded research.

"They want the University to run off grants . . . more like a business," Ditmore said. "The University will simply become a branch of the military if that happens."

A proposal to commend City residents for their efforts and relocate the shantytown either to the State House steps in Boston or another "fitting place," because its effect on stalling state budget cutbacks has waned, never reached the senate floor.

Sen. W. Greg Rothman, who sponsored the proposal along with four conservative senators, said the senate will postpone action for one week so City residents can "get their act together" and focus their energy on fighting state budget cuts.

"My idea isn't to punish anyone; what they did was good," Rothman said. But, he denounced linking budget cuts to military funding claiming "It's not just to build bullets and tanks."

A few minutes before the protest, members of the senate sat quietly listening to former Amherst state rep. James Collins, who served for a short time as chancellor of the Board of Regents, urge them to continue the fight against the cuts and attend today's hearing in Springfield. (See related story.)

Collins, a UMass graduate who served as president of the Student Government Association, denounced the tuition retention plan, which proposes to increase tuition and return a portion of the money to the school through reserve funds.

However, Collins said tuition and fee hikes will only prevent the University from providing an education to all people regardless of wealth or status.

"The UMass banner should be in the poorest and worst street corners in this state," he said.

CAG election postponed one week

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The second Commuter Area Government presidential election scheduled for today has been postponed until next Thursday so students may attend a hearing in Springfield on state funding for public higher education.

The Senate Ways and Means committee scheduled the hearing for 10:30 a.m. today at Central High school to hear testimony from parents, faculty, alumni and students.

Acting CAG president Clarinda Rose-Turner, who was elected CAG vice president two weeks ago, said state budget cutbacks take precedence over the elections and urged students to attend the hearing.

"The hearing affects the future of UMass," Rose-Turner said.

"Someone will eventually hold office [as CAG president], but if we don't do anything about the budget cuts,

Arthur Hilson, executive director of Public Safety at UMass, motions to demonstrators at this week's occupation of Memorial Hall.

Hilson plans to make a difference

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Fourth in a 10-part series on life at the University of Massachusetts

The character of Arthur Hilson as topmost law enforcement figure at the University of Massachusetts seems oddly displaced in a position usually reserved for the crusty, hardened and tightlipped.

A crucifix hangs adjacent to a picture of his favorite pet cat upon the wall next to his desk. Along the shelves around the room, on the desk, practically everywhere you look in the office, you will see countless mementos given him by those he has helped out over the years.

He proudly sets forward a folder to anyone who asks him what is rewarding about his job as top cop. The file is stuffed with postcards, notes and letters expressing thanks that he was there for them.

Hilson, 53, assumed the job of interim director of Public Safety in April 1986 when, he said, students, faculty, and administrators at the school deemed the department ineffective.

Despite having no previous police experience, administrators later offered him the position of executive director.

But having no experience in a position is nothing new to Hilson who, before coming to public safety, attained the title of director of Placement Services in 1978, beating out applicants with several years seniority in the field.

The turmoil Public Safety was going through presented Hilson with one thing he says he thrives on: "I love a challenge."

"I am hopeful my tenure here will help make a difference in public safety at this campus. A difference in the way our people are perceived," Hilson said.

It could be said that Hilson is working on the perception problem by starting at the top within his own sphere of influence by being as receptive as he can to any complaints that may come his way. He says he wants to dispel the image police have received as uncaring tyrants who want to clamp down on living life itself.

Hilson, who vows to make real and lasting changes to the department, sets his own stage and directs every scene. Not one to bandy his words, it is his passion for God and his ideals which dictate his lifestyle and demeanor.

"On April 6, 1990 it will be my third year here in this position. If this department is not turned around in my three year tenure, I will leave," Hilson said.

Hilson's policies are as direct and steadfast as his words. "I make my decisions on what I think is right, not what is popular," said Hilson, following an axiom of the Rev. Martin Luther King. "That," Hilson says pointing to the crucifix on his wall "is my first love." He was ordained as a Baptist minister in 1982 and has served a parish in Holyoke as associate minister since 1979.

"My .38 is in there," said Hilson pointing to the drawer where his gun is kept. "But my bible is on top."

However, he said, religion was not always a strong factor in his life.

"I was a sailor. I travelled. I drank with the best of them. I ran with the best of them," he said laughing heartily. "But somewhere along the line, early in the late 70s, I became realigned with the church." He said once he is through with the administrative arena he will take on a full-time parish of his own.

Hilson spent the first 18 years of his life in Cincinati, Ohio. He later joined the US Navy and served for 20 years on six different ships, from the end of the Korean war on into Vietnam.

Fraternity barkeeps fined $250

NORTHAMPTON — Three members of the defunct Beta Kappa Phi fraternity charged with operating an illegal bar last year have agreed to pay $250 toward the cost of the police investigation in exchange for having the case continued without a finding.

Edward Kennedy, 22, of Saugus, Bradford Mulder,22 of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Joseph Orlando, 20, of Franklin were among seven fraternity members who were indicted in connection with the bar in the basement of their house at 388 North Pleasant Street.

Two weeks ago, charges against fraternity's corporation were dropped in exchange for the corporation's promise to donate $3,000 to a community alcohol education fund in Amherst, pay $5,200 to the state and local police for its investigation, and to use the estimated $100,000 proceeds from the sale of the fraternity house to establish a scholarship fund for the relatives of fraternity members.

The bar was shut down when state, UMass and Amherst police raided the house on April 7 of last year, finding 100 beer kegs — 84 empty and 16 full. During the raid, which was filmed, police found 100 underage drinkers among a crowd of 112 party-goers. Also confiscated at the party was a 30-foot horseshoe bar.

The day following the raid, the University cancelled recognition of the fraternity, the first in a series of three fraternity expulsions since that date. Last fall, Alpha Tau Gamma had its charter revoked amid reports of alleged hazing, and this semester Theta Chi lost fraternity status after violating probation within the Greek Area.

Assistant District Attorney David Angier told Hampshire Superior Court Judge John F. Murphy Jr. that the BKO fraternity has paid the $3,000 into the alcohol education fund.

Under the agreement, Kennedy and Orlando will be on unsupervised probation until they graduate or for one year, whichever is less.

Sen. Kennedy to speak tonight

US Sen. Edward Kennedy is scheduled to speak tonight on a variety of political issues, ranging from national service to funding to public higher education, according to the University Democrats.

Kennedy, a veteran senator who was re-elected last year in a landslide victory, is expected to discuss plans for his next six years in office, said Bob Johnston, co-president of UDems.

Johnston said the club is expecting a massive turnout for Kennedy's speech, and referred to the veteran senator as "the patron saint of the Democratic party."

"[Kennedy] is vocal on all of the major issues the Democrats are concerned about in this era," he said. "This will be a big event for the UDems."

Johnston said he is expecting several demonstrations by right-wing conservative groups on campus to coincide with Kennedy's arrival.

Last November, during the week before the presidential election, about 300 students and protesters showed up to hear Kennedy speak, but the senator cancelled at the last minute because of helicopter difficulties.

Alcohol influential in university environment

● Students say they drink at least 3 times a week

By BETH O'TOOLE
Collegian Correspondent

Pseudonyms have been used in this article to protect students' identities

The majority of University of Massachusetts students drink alcohol at alarming rates, according to a 1988 Project Pulse survey. Nearly 43 percent of students polled said they drink three to four times a week, and 10.9 percent said they are intoxicated two to three times a week.

Those statistics are not surprising, according to Karen Jacobus, coordinator of the Alcohol and Drug Education Program, who said college is a place where heavy drinking is accepted as the norm. The University environment creates drinking problems because it allows students to test their limits, she said.

"The biggest problem on campus is alcohol," Jacobus said. "Alcoholism is a combination of physical and psychological dependence on alcohol. There is a compulsion to use [alcohol] and a loss of control when the person does use it."

Alcohol is a depressant drug that affects the brain, she said, by reducing a person's judgment, decision-making, reflexes and reactions. Fatty liver, cirrhosis, and scar tissue can develop from excessive alcohol consumption, she said.

Peter, a recovering alcoholic, said the college environment accelerated his addiction. "My feeling is that [alcoholism] would have come our sooner or later, though. I believe it is genetic," he said.

Signs of alcoholism include blackouts, changes in behavior, drinking to cope with stress, and increased problems (arguments, hassles, injuries) caused by drinking, Jacobus said.

● Greek Area tightens up alcohol policy

By BRIAN PURCELL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts' removal of Theta Chi after it violated their probation by holding a keg party on March 2 has had a marked effect on the Greek Area in regards to alcohol policy and awareness, according to several Greeks.

Liability at social functions is now more of a concern among Greek members. According to Sean Byrt, president of Lambda Chi Alpha, liability has become a bigger issue in the last two years, with the loss of Theta Chi highlighting the problem even more.

"If someone comes in our house, and walks on our roof or drives home drunk, we could be held liable and our charter taken away," he said. "We would be closed down instantly. This scares the hell out of us all the time."

John Cunningham, a senior brother at Zeta Psi and Interfraternity Council member, recalled how the Beta Kappa Phi (BKO) incident heightened the seriousness of illegal fraternity activity. The fraternity was closed last spring when police found an illegal bar-like operation and 1.5 ounces of cocaine.

"What happened at BKO scared us a lot, we were right across the street when it happened," Cunningham said. "The whole thing made us realize that the whole Greek Area had to pull together and take care of things that were wrong."

Before the BKO shutdown the Greek Area had virtually an open party format, but the increased pressure has led to a stricter policy on social functions, said Scott Princer, a brother and former social chairman at Pi Kappa Alpha.

Registering all parties with the Amherst Police and the Greek Affairs Office is standard practice, along with checking ID's and avoiding the sale of alcohol, which places the fraternity in the category of an illegal bar, Princer said.

According to Carlene Riccelli, director of Greek Affairs, in addition to a stricter alcohol policy, alcohol awareness is being addressed by events this semester such as a Greek Leadership Weekend Retreat in Williamsburg, at which alcohol was discussed, and workshops on alcohol at several fraternities and sororities.

Other programs include the Greek-run Bacchus Alcohol Awareness Group, which set up alcohol displays in the campus center earlier this semester, Riccelli said. Greeks also worked with Amherst High School's Students Against Drunk Driving to display at the high school the "Convincer," an automobile crash simulator that illustrates the effectiveness of seat belts and reinforces the danger of drunk driving, she said.

Cunningham said that educating the incoming pledges on both alcohol policy and alcohol abuse is now being stressed, so the pledges do not have to learn the hard way later.

"As long as one house is an Animal House, the rest of the Greek Area will be looked on that way," he said.

we may not have a university."

Shuttle buses are scheduled to run from Haigis Mall to Central High School starting at 9 a.m.

The CAG presidential election is being held again because of errors made during the first elections two weeks ago, in which Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes defeated Robb Smith and Ted Chambers by four votes.

The errors stem from ballot box workers' failure to check several voters' eligibility and the discovery that at least one student voted from the Greek area, which is not considered part of the CAG district.

Smith and Chambers immediately contested the results and the Commuter Area Governing Board ruled to hold a second election last week.

Sen. Bob McDevitt, however, petitioned the Judiciary earlier this week to reverse the board's decision and ratify Reilly and Zarganes as CAG co-presidents.

The Judiciary agreed yesterday to hear McDevitt's petition during a public hearing scheduled for Tuesday night, according to Clerk of Courts Chris Mclellan.

Mclellan said a tribunal, consisting of three justices including presiding Justice John Sanchez will hear the case. Witnesses for both parties will be subpoenaed this week, he said.

Hilson

While in the navy, he put together a band to which he lent his name and trumpet. Meanwhile he got undergraduate work done at six universities.

"We were called A.L. Hilson and the Blue Notes. When rock was getting big we played clubs and nightspots in Maryland and Virginia. We started by playing what they wanted, but by the end of the night we had moved onto jazz," Hilson said.

Acting as tension moderator for disputes which frequently occurred between Blacks and Whites, Hilson counseled many of his fellow servicemen, which provided the backdrop for his first position at the University of Massachusetts.

"I came here in 1973 on the G.I. bill to do my graduate work for my masters and doctorate, in Management and General Systems Theory. For the better part of a year and half I wouldn't even talk about it [Vietnam]. At that time there were a number of veterans on this campus who felt the same way," Hilson said.

When he finished his studies in 1975, culminating in an dissertation on the Vietnam veteran and their impact at the University, he heard that the University was creating a new position — director of Veteran's Assistance and Counseling Services. He applied and was appointed to the position.

"I designed a program which would help a veteran in every conceivable way, loans, counseling, everything," Hilson said.

Since that time Hilson has spent a considerable energy with a number of local and national associations aimed towards easing the burden on veterans and aiding them whenever possible.

"I feel close to the men and women who have given so much for this country," Hilson says, each word potent with concern.

"As long as I can see that I have helped someone then my living has not been in vain," Hilson says echoing a small prayer he keeps by his desk.

Workshops to focus on women of color

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

Women of color, considered by some to be a "double minority," will have an opportunity Saturday to discuss social concerns affecting certain minority groups.

"Issues Affecting Today's Women of Color," a symposium to be held in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center, will feature six morning workshops focusing on the concerns of Native Americans, Asian Americans, Latinas, and African Americans. The hour-long workshops, in Campus Center rooms 162-175, will be held from 9 a.m. to noon.

Toya Wiatt, a member of the Minority Graduate Student Association and a chairwoman of the event, said, "The purpose of the event is to bring together minority women on a social level, and also on an intellectual level."

A luncheon with keynote speaker Dr. Joyce Ladner, professor of sociology at Howard University, will begin at noon in CC Room 1009.

Ladner, a noted author and social-psychologist, is scheduled to lecture at 12:30 p.m. on Black women and their families.

Ladner is considered an authority on this topic, and has lectured and published her writings on such issues as teen pregnancy and trans-racial adoption.

Paula Eliott, a graduate student in the School of Education, will provide musical entertainment after the luncheon.

Planning for the event began last year, Wiatt said, in reaction to the type of environment the University of Massachusetts provides minorities. "[UMass] can be an isolated environment for minorities," she said, and "sometimes even doubly so for minority women."

The event, co-sponsored by the Graduate Student Association and the Everywoman's Center, is free and open to the public.

UMass students receive anti-Semitic notes

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Conservative senator W. Greg Rothman and Collegian staff member Jason Talerman have recently received threatening mail from a source known only as "The Real Right."

A letter sent to Rothman and Talerman last Wednesday said,"It is really too bad you f—king Jew boys wernt (sic) a little older and Lived in Europe. Just Remember—The Real Right—Doesn't want any Stinking Jews. Kill All Jews." At the bottom of the letter was a swastika and the name "The Real Right."

On Monday, Talerman received a copy of a photo he had taken for the April 10 issue of the Collegian, featuring an interview with Rothman. The photo featured Talerman, Rothman, Steve Lutz and Brian Darling, posing near a framed photograph of former President Reagan. On the clip was the swastika and name, along with the words,"KILL ALL JEWS"and a false quote from Reagan, saying "I Went To Bitsburg (sic) because I Hate Jews." Finally, on the caption, the names of the four were crossed out, replaced with the word "Jew".

Rothman, who is one-fourth Jewish, said that his controversial actions may be a reason for the threats. "No doubt, I have enemies on campus . . . but I don't think there's any justification for this." Talerman, who is Jewish, added that he has no idea who could have written the letter.

Alisa Berkowitz, president of Hillel, called the incident "completely disgusting" and said that the mail "points out, in a crude way, that anti-Semitism does exist," and added that the timing of the mail, between the beginning of Passover (sundown on Wednesday) and the upcoming Holocaust Memorial Week, was ironic.

On Thursday, Arthur Hilson, director of the Department of Public Safety, said that the investigation may be closed because of jurisdictional problems regarding the sending of the letters. The investigation was put on hold yesterday.

Alcoholics may deny their problem. "I drank and drugged for nine years. Out of that nine years, I didn't even think I had a problem until the eighth year," Peter said.

He said he realized his problem three years ago. "I knew I had a problem because I kept flunking out of school." Once a person determines they have a drinking problem they can contact Jacobus for information, have an assessment done at UMass Mental Health Services, go to Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, or go into an in-patient program at a hospital, said Jacobus.

"I tried to do it [recover] on my own first, for about six months I went crazy. I was really confused," said Peter. "I didn't know how to live sober."

Peter said he learned to "live sober" through therapy and A.A. He said he now attends meetings four times a week.

US backs changes in USSR

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration came down yesterday on the side of the changes Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has engineered in the Communist Party leadership and said it hoped the result would be a strengthening of democratization and openness.

In a statement, the administration described Gorbachev's purge of 74 Central Committee full voting members and the promotion of several of the Soviet leader's proteges as dramatic and stressed they were a matter of internal Soviet policy.

But the administration then went on to express hope that "whatever changes occur, their effect is to strengthen and promote the reform process in the Soviet Union toward greater democratization and openness."

The statement was read by Margaret Tutwiler, the State Department spokeswoman, in response to questions at the department's daily press briefing. Secretary of State James A. Baker III will hold talks in Moscow May 10-11 with Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Edward A. Shevarnadze.

Doctors find worm in man's appendix

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors removing a young man's appendix were surprised when the real cause of his pain wriggled into view — a two-inch-long red worm that he had eaten with his home-made sushi.

When the patient came to the hospital in pain, the doctors assumed he had appendicitis. But his appendix looked normal during the operation. And as they were about to sew him up, the worm slithered out of his abdominal cavity and onto the surgical drapes.

After he awoke, the man remembered eating raw fish the night before at a friend's home in New York City.

'There is a clear danger involved in eating raw fish. This underscores that danger,' said Dr. Murray Wittner, a parasitologist at Albert Einstein College of Medicine who was sent the worm by the astonished surgeons.

While worms have been a long-recognized hazard of eating raw fish, experts say most cases of worm infection occur when people prepare it at home. At restaurants, sharp-eyed sushi chefs are probably adept at keeping wormy fish from reaching customers.

In the latest case, described in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, doctors identified the culprit as a larval nematode known as eustronglides. The adult form of this creature is a parasite of fish-eating birds, while the larvae are found in the flesh of fish that live in brackish and fresh water.

In an editorial in the journal, Dr. Peter M. Schantz of the US Centers for Disease Control noted that until now, only four cases of human infection with this nematode have been reported. All of them were fishermen who swallowed bait minnows whole — "a practice not likely to be widely imitated."

The victim in the latest case recovered uneventfully after the doctors plucked the worm from his incision. However, the episode caused a few moments of disbelief for the surgical team.

"He looked like anybody else with appendicitis," recalled the surgeon, Dr. James W. Turner of Booth Memorial Hospital. "I operated, and much to my chagrin the appendix was normal. I was getting ready to close the abdomen, and I see this little thing, and it looks like it's moving.

"I said, 'Wait a minute. There's something wrong. I'll be damned. It's a worm.'"

The worms most commonly acquired from raw seafood are larvae of the family Anisakidae. Between 25 and 50 US cases have been documented, but experts believe that most cases are not recognized or reported to health officials.

Often the worms pass harmlessly through the digestive system or are coughed up a few hours after the meal. Doctors have even described a condition known as "tingling throat syndrome," which occurs when the worms get stuck in the back of the throat.

Sometimes, however, the worms burrow into the wall of the stomach or the intestines. They must be removed with a tube that is pushed down the victim's throat.

Schantz noted that many commercial fish are commonly infected with worms. These include mackerel, herring, rockfish, salmon, and cod. The parasites are also more common in fish taken from the Pacific Ocean that from the Atlantic.

High PCB level found in Hoosic River fish

NORTH ADAMS (AP) — Trout taken from the Hoosic River have shown the highest contamination levels of toxic PCB's of any fish tested in the state's 6-year-old river testing program, according to a state report.

But while state Public Health Department officials pondered warning against eating fish from the river, state Fisheries and Wildlife officials went ahead yesterday with plans to dump hundreds more young trout in the river.

The stocking was part of an experimental program aimed at restoring a recreational fishery in the once nearly dead stream that cuts across the northwestern corner of Massachussetts and southwestern Vermont before flowing into the Hudson River, north of Albany, N.Y.

Tests completed on 13 brown trout taken from the river here last fall showed that 12 of the fish contained between 3.1 parts per million and 19.4 parts per million of PCBs, polychlorinated biphenyls, according to an internal Department of Environmental Quality Engineering memo obtained by The Transcript in North Adams.

Federal limits for PCBs in food fish are 2 parts per million.

"I don't have any records of any higher readings in the state," Peter Otis, assistant director of the division of Fisheries and Wildlife, told the newspaper. The average PCB level in the 13 fish, including one trout that had a reading of 1.1 parts per million, was 8 parts per million, according to the report.

"Right now we are reviewing the information," said Ruth Taylor, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Public Health, which has issued warnings against eating fish in other Massachusetts waters after lower levels of PCB contamination was found.

She said yesterday that department officials had received a copy of the test results on Monday, but she had no immediate indication when department officials might respond to the findings.

Roland Dupuis, assistant regional director for the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, said the fish tested had all been taken from a 1.5 mile section of the river below the Sprague Electric Company's Brown Street plant, but he declined to speculate whether that was the source of the contamination.

The electronics manufacturer used PCBs before they were banned in 1976 and small deposits of the chemicals have been found in various locations, including an old mill complex, no longer used by Sprague, that the state wants to turn into a $72 million contemporary art museum.

Biologist Joseph Bergin said Fisheries and Wildlife had been aware of "potential problems," and had expected the report to reveal high PCB levels, when it decided to proceed with the program to stock at least 200 fish in the river. New York has also found high levels of PCBs in fish it has tested downstream from Massachusetts, he said.

But, he said, officials were still interested in seeing whether at least a catch-and-release program for recreational fishing could be developed on the river, which was so polluted it was almost devoid of animal life a decade ago.

"There has been a remarkable improvement in the water quality," he said. "In 1978, there were 2,000 pounds a day of pollutants pouring into the river. By 1984 that had been reduced to 200 pounds a day."

Although some anglers had reported catching trout a few years earlier, he said, the division first began seeing trout in the river at North Adams three years ago.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless specifically stated.

No mudslinging, please

Once again, our so-called student leaders have shown that they are not deserving of such a title.

This year's Commuter Area Government election was ruled invalid because students who did not live in the Commuter Area voted. Also, election workers did not check the number of credits continuing education students had (they are supposed to have at least 12 to be eligible to vote). The second election, which was supposed to be held today, was postponed because of a hearing in Springfield over the budget cuts.

The real concern behind the outcome of the first election was negative campaigning. Posters with blatant lies about Robb Smith and Ted Chambers were hung up around campus, falsely accusing them of stealing CAG money and giving it to the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance. Tim Reilly, a co-candidate for CAG president, claimed he and his running mate Alex Zarganes were called "fascist" and their campaign workers "bimbos."

Now, new posters, still making the same false accusations of Robb Smith and Ted Chambers, have been hung. Former Student Government presidential candidate Josh Gordon admitted to distributing the first set of posters to his friends, claiming revenge for the Liberator, a paper which gave him bad press. He claimed this ruined any chance of him winning the election.

It is time we grow up. The students want a sincere, hard-working body of leaders. They do not want mudslingers or petty vengance seekers. Some of our student leaders should wipe away the mud they've slung and get down to real business.

Don't blame the victim

"I can't believe the news today, I can't close my eyes and make it go away . . ."

A 28-year old woman lies in a coma at a New York hospital, her skull fractured by a metal pipe. She was beaten and raped Wednesday night, when she was jogging in Central Park. One of her eight attackers, who range in age from 14 to 17, said, "It was fun."

Now some of you might be thinking, 'Well, it's her fault, she shouldn't be jogging alone at night.' But that's an inexcusable attitude to have, that would be like blaming a 12-year old victim of molestation for looking "sexy", or like blaming a girlfriend of a man who beats her up whenever he's drunk for saying the "wrong thing."

These are just cop-outs. They are our way of ignoring the problems of society; a society that raised eight teenagers who could laugh about their rape and attempted murder of a woman.

Perhaps the source of the problem is the violence in television and movies, or perhaps it is, as some suggest, pornography. But I don't know. I don't have an easy answer.

But I do know that we must stop blaming the victim, and start blaming ourselves. We have created an atmosphere in our society where such appalling acts of violence are seen as excusable and understandable.

I pray that some day we will see an end to this violence, but until that day, I'll shed a tear for each victim, and hope that he or she will be the last.

Jenifer Report is bad news

Chancellor Jenifer's address to the Faculty Senate on April 20 was an attempt to convince our faculty members to accept his report on "The Reorganization of Public Higher Education in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," commonly referred to as the "Jenifer Report." In his speech, Jenifer commented on the talent of professors here on campus, the flagship university. While he commented on our professors, on the quality of their work and contributions to the Commonwealth, Jenifer stressed the need to become competitive with other Massachusetts universities. "We must compete for money, and show that UMass is deserving," he said. "If you are capable, you'll get it." I don't believe that public higher education should become a competition between colleges and universities.

Tracy Davis

Chancellor Jenifer forgot to mention that his plan will increase the red-tape that already exists within the budgetary review process for institutions, by giving each community college, state college, and university their own Board of Trustees. It would also combine the University of Massachusetts at Amherst with the Worcester (Medical School) branch to serve as one institution. UMass/Amherst and UMass/Worcester are two distinctly different schools. The combining of these campuses will hurt UMass even more than the budget cuts.

The Jenifer Report will change the names of the University of Lowell and Southeastern Massachusetts University (SMU) to the University of Massachusetts at Lowell and the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth, respectively. It would give the Board of Regents more power over the university than it already has.

A report of ad hoc Committee of the Faculty Senate highlighted the main points in the Jenifer Report. Members of the committee noted the lack of time (approximately three weeks to prepare) and effort (no consultation from the universities in question before) into developing this plan. Another major issue is the vague definition of powers between the Board of Trustees and the Board of Regents.

In essence, the Jenifer Report was developed to coincide with the release of the Saxon Report, which was another report relating to the reorganization of public higher education. The students are again, caught in a power struggle between the Regents and the Trustees. Maybe some people forgot they are determining the future of students and our education rather, than the restructuring of buildings on paper.

During this difficult time of a state budget crisis, I don't think that energy should be spent concentrating on reorganizing public higher education. We should unite our efforts to lobby state representatives and senators, impressing upon them the importance of funding all public higher education institutions, not particular sections.

My main concern is the University of Massachusetts, and more specifically the Amherst branch, but an education is an important right to all.

Tracy Davis is the Student Government Association president

Symptoms of idealistic activism

A recent Collegian article detailed the efforts led by first-year student Christine Robinson to fight apartheid in South Africa by banning the sale of Coca Cola products on the UMass campus (April 20, "Students petition to ban Coke machines")

Robinson also advocated ending the use by UMass of what she calls "dirty money," the 17 percent stipend received from the sale of these products. We think that this campaign, and especially Robinson's comparison of consuming Coke to "drinking the blood of a dead South African" is an ill-conceived way of combatting South African racism and a rabid, preachy attack on anyone who has the misfortune not to know which soft drinks are the politically correct ones.

In the midst of a severe budget crisis at UMass, Robinson recommends abandoning this source of revenue in hopes that doing so will stop people from drinking coke on this campus, that the boycott will spread widely enough for the Coca Cola Corporation to pull out of Swailand. That this drive will signal other companies to pull out of South Africa, and that the South African government will then, in response, end apartheid.

As much as all of us are opposed to apartheid, this seems to be an awfully long chain of events to expect from the banning of Coke here, especially when UMass is in such dire need of funds. Every action must be weighed by its potential to bring about the desired result. It is not enough to resort to merely symbolic actions or to succumb to emotional sloganeering.

Robinson's statements are symptomatic of the idealistic political activism which seems so rampant on this campus — a desire to be "radical," to make inflamatory and controversial statements — than to effect substantive change.

Trivializing the Holocaust unjust to all

Hitler's Third Reich, stronger than ever, has temporarily relocated its headquarters to Amherst, Massachusetts.

For the most part, a story like this remains confined to the supermarket tabloids. But if you paid attention to the political climate on this campus, you'd think a racist Skinhead was in the White (Supremacy) House. Left-leaning UMass activists routinely compare Republican Club members to "Nazi stormtroopers" and "Hitler Youth." A recent Spartacus League flyer went as far to suggest that these conservative students consider Heinrich Himmler their role model.

Darren Garnick

Comparing people you don't like to mass murderers can be dismissed as ignorant rhetoric. This trendy tactic, however, lends itself to the distortion of history.

Of course, tragic events have occurred which do have legitimate parallels to the Nazi Holocaust. The murder-fests in WWI Armenia and Pol Pot's Cambodia are chilling examples. But the media's overuse of genocidal metaphors slander millions of corpses who cannot complain about unfair comparisons.

Any thug is a Nazi. Anyone who suffers is a Holocaust victim. With each and every inane comparison, the ultra-evil connotation of the word "Nazi" loses significance.

A USA Today headline about the Exxon Valdez oil spill described the disaster as Alaska's wildlife holocaust. The story goes on to discuss the possible threat to the lives of 10,000 otters and 300,000 birds. Prince William Sound is not Auschwitz. And the problem with linking the two has nothing to do with the number of lives at stake or whether those lives are humans or birds.

The oil spill was an accident. The Holocaust was a deliberately designed Death factory which processed people like hamburger patties. The butcher metaphor was one the Nazis were proud of. The Iron Guard, Hitler's stormtroopers in Rumania, once dragged 200 Jews to a Bucharest slaughterhouse, chopped off their heads and hung their naked corpses on iron hooks. The bodies were later stamped: "Carne Kosher." Kosher meat.

The USA Today comparison was likely made with no ill intent. The ulterior motives of those who blatantly trivialize the Holocaust should be the focus of alarm. Jordanian immigrant Sirhan Sirhan said he murdered Robert F. Kennedy because of the presidential candidate's support of Israel (a threat to the Arab world). In a recent David Frost interview, he "clarified" this point: "Imagine if you were a German or a Jew in Hitler's Germany and you had the opportunity to assassinate Hitler. I'm sure that you would have tried to do that."

Sirhan's Hitler/RFK comparison is not the simple ravings of a deranged lunatic. It reflects the Arab world's charge that the Holocaust is blown out of proportion by crybaby Israel in order to gain political sympathy. Thus evolves the campaign to compare Israeli military prisons to Nazi concentration camps, claiming the Jews are doing to the Arabs what the Nazis did to them. Accusations in the Arab press that the Holocaust is one big "Zionist lie" are common.

On the home front, prosecuting attorney John Keker joined the Nazi-labeling spree in his closing arguments at the Iran-Contra trial. Keker said that Ollie North and Adolf Hitler shared a similar strategy of achieving their goals through lies. Defense lawyer Brendan Sullivan shot back "[Anyone] who links Colonel North to Adolf Hitler is not credible and should not be believed."

Exactly. Question the credibility of anyone making a Hitlerian comparison. He made other mass murderers seem angelic. An East German government newspaper recently banned a Soviet magazine article comparing Hitler and Stalin (a mass murderer by any standard), saying it was an effort "to cleanse Hitler." Hitler's image doesn't need any further cleaning.

Darren Garnick is a Collegian columnist

In other news . . .

Right-wing groups in West Germany have grown increasingly visible recently, but authorities last week drew the line at how far such movements may go. Bonn banned the 170-member neo-Nazi National Assembly political group, confiscating ammunition, knives and swasticas during nationwide raids on offices and members' apartments. "This strike against neo-Nazis should be seen as an unmistakable warning signal," said Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann. "West Germany will not be a playing field for right-wing extremism."

The raids came only ten days after the new-right party, the Republicans, won a startling 7.5 percent of the vote in West Berlin city elections. Zimmermann said the ban on the National Assembly did not affect the Republican Party, because it is not considered "extremist." As for the National Assembly group, leader Michael Kuhnen, who remained free despite the ban, announced the formation of a new neo-Nazi party.

A tragedy we could have prevented

The oil spill in Alaska is now larger than the state of Delaware. 10 million gallons of crude oil were spilled into the pristine waters of Prince William Sound. For a week, everyone cried about how horrible it was for such an accident to occur. Then it seemed that it was simply forgotten. Meanwhile, 80 birds die (per mile) a day. It has been killing even the animals at the top of the food chain, such as whales and deer.

Kathleen Osowski

The fact that an oil spill occured is a tragedy, that fact that it was preventable is even more discouraging. The captain of the ship had been drinking — a stupid reason for such devastation.

Captain Joseph Hazelwood has a history of many past shipping accidents and had been arrested for drunk driving in New York. He should have never been in control of a ship with his history. The area he had to steer through was 10 miles wide which is not exactly demanding.

Ironically, a week before the spill, the Senate Energy and Commerce Committee voted 12-7 to approve drilling in a 15 million acre costal animal refuge in Alaska (one of the last pure places on Earth).

President Bush's first comment on the accident was that he was still in favor of the drilling there. The accident had not changed his mind, and the drilling should start "as soon as possible." The president also stated that the Federal government's help was not needed because he believed in Exxon's clean up effort. Currently, there are only 800 people working to clean this incredible spill of 575 square-miles.

Exxon waited many hours before taking any action, wasting valuable time. The more time that elapsed, the thicker and tarrier the oil became, and the deeper it sank.

In the effort being made to clean up the spill, machines called skimmers are being used. They act like vacuums to clean the surface of the water. Much of the oil has sunk far too deep for this to make even the slightest impact. The other technique being used is detoxizin agents as chemical dispersals. They work in a way similar to dishwashing detergent does in breaking up grease, and like a detergent, they work best when the oil is fresh.

So it seems the spill has already happened, there isn't much we can do at this date to clean it. Things will just continue as before. The best we can do is pray that it won't happen again. It appears that oil is more valuable than the planet from which it is obtained. Accordingly, the oil companies must be more powerful than the United States government in environmental issues.

It could also be that Alaska is just too far away to think about. Hey, no one lives there anyway. Well, at least not anymore.

The people of Valdez and the surrounding communities will have to leave their home is severely polluted, but their primary livelihood was fishing. Now the fish are dead. If this spill had taken place off the coast of Miami Beach, do you think cleaning action would have been so slow or as feeble?

Since November, there have been six oil spills in Alaska and two in Hawaii from Exxon Houston. There were 1,600 oil spills in the United States last year alone. What are we doing to this planet? It used to be enough for me to know places existed where nature was still untouched. Now I am very discouraged in our world.

The Boston Globe printed a cartoon that captured what I am trying to convey. An oil-covered seal said to her mate, "Remember when they just bludgeoned us?"

Taking action will help make the grade

Did you ever feel upset or disappointed because you worked hard in a class and your grade didn't show the effort you put in? Have you ever felt frustrated because you have a hard time understanding your professor in lecture?

Minu Sebastian

If you have felt this way, it is important to realize you can do something about it. If you have received a lower grade than you expected, question it. Try to find the professor or go to the department to find out who could help you. And if you have a hard time grasping what your professor is trying to teach you, then go see him or her. Many professors enjoy talking to students in their office, especially if the class size is really large, where it is especially hard to get a sense of how the students are feeling.

Most people usually procrastinate seeing their professors or questioning a grade. I usually do the same, but last year I was disappointed with the grade I got in my College Writing class. I felt I was treated unfairly. I knew other students in the class who did less work and got worse grades, but received a better grade than I did.

I went down to the College Writing Program office and told them my situation. They said that I first had to get in touch with the professor and tell him how I felt. Since my teacher (he wasn't a professor) lived in Chicago, I had to write to him. In my letter, I told him how I felt and gave him my address. He never responded to my letter.

After a month and a half, I went back to the Writing Program office. I told them that I was not getting a response. Pat Zukowski, director of the writing program, was very helpful. She took copies of all my papers and sent them to my teacher. She also called him a few times.

In the next few months, we waited for a response. None came. During this time, I was becoming increasingly frustrated because I thought I was wasting my time and nothing could be done.

Because I was persistent and pursued the problem, I eventually got some results. Pat Zukowski reevaluated my papers and came to her own estimate of my grade. It was one grade higher than my original mark. I was happy that my grade was changed, but more importantly, I felt that I had been treated fairly.

So next time you have doubts about your grade or you have a question about your professor, don't hesitate to look into it. You are paying money for your education. You can benefit more out of your classes if you talk to your professors and try to understand their concepts of the course.

As students, we have a say in our grades and our classes. Don't take you power for granted. After all, it's your future which is at stake, not your professor's.

Do not forget our sympathies

Last week's editorial by Darren Garnick ("Nationalism not racism," April 20) represents exactly the kind of thinking we are trying to counter in our new group Jews Against Zionism. As one of the "three members" of the organization (there are more like 15) I feel I must respond to his ill-informed opinions. I may not have taken the time to respond to Garnick's piece which I feel would be seen in the light of its tired pro-Israeli bias by any awake, intelligent reader, if he hadn't made the absurd and altogether obscene statement connecting Jews against Zionism with "Blacks for Apartheid." How ironic it is that someone who supports a regime in the Occupied Territories whose separation of Jew and Arab under the law is a direct for of apartheid, has the gall to accuse Jews who oppose such a regime of "making as much sense as Blacks for apartheid."

Boyd Hilton

Garnick is gracious in admitting that "there are some Zionists who are racists" but then tells us that "to equate all Zionists with racists is like saying that all Arabs are terrorists." Garnick's own racism obviously precludes him from realizing that any analogy between Zionists and Arabs is ridiculous. Arabs do not choose to be Arabs. Zionists do choose to be Zionists. Any generalizing statement about Arabs is racist. A general statement about Zionists is a comment on the political ideology they follow. Don't make the mistake that Zionists are a "people." They are not "the Jews."

Zionism is the movement that tells us there must be a state of the Jewish people where all other peoples, ethnicities and nationalities are not entitled to be equal citizens under the law. I find it interesting that Garnick can't respond to the fact that Israel's law of Return grants citizenship to Jews and Jews only. Is there something special about people like Garnick and myself that we should be granted such a right over a people who have been living in Palestine for centuries?

That Garnick doesn't bother to keep up with Israel's activities in the conflict is clear from his outdated claim that "the West Bank and Gaza are not part of Israel." According to him they are only, harmlessly, "occupied territories." In fact, according to official Israeli figures at the beginning of 1987, over half the West Bank has been confiscated by the Israeli state. This land is now the property of the Jewish state for permanent, exclusive Jewish use. At the same time there were 60,000 Jewish settlers in the area among a million Palestinians. Over half the land goes to 1/15 of the population purely on the grounds that they are Jewish. What is this if it isn't South Africa-style apartheid?

But Garnick's most hilarious burst of rhetoric occurs when he patronizingly tells us to forget our sympathies for a moment." As if he, an extremist Zionist who doesn't even want Israel to end its occupation, can ever begin to forget his sympathies. He explains the "focus" of the last 41 years of conflict has been "Israel's right to exist." The focus of the conflict is the fact that the Palestinians were dispossessed of their land 41 years ago and have been trying to get some of it back ever since.

I never try to forget my sympathies, because to do so would be like Garnick, who forgets the Palestinians who are being beaten up, shot, tortured, and incarcerated without charge in concentration camps right now. Wake up, and see what the state created in our name is doing.

Skirting the issue

Stop calling it "leather"! I'm tired of people skirting the issue, and calling it something other than it is. The object is cow's skin — the dried up, beaten and dyed skin of a once living, free-moving, sentient being . . . not dissimilar from ourselves.

The present fashion of animal skin jackets and skirts is revolting. It illustrates humankind's complete disregard for any species other than itself.

Maybe you like your cow-skin jacket? Maybe you think it's sexy or chic? Well, what is so sexy about wearing the hide of a dead animal? Leather is not sexy or chic . . . it is sadistic!

Why do we call it "leather"? Do we purposely distance ourselves from the grizzly truth? Could it be that we don't want to be reminded of what leather really is?

Cows are chained by the ankles and hoisted into the air so that their blood will rush to their heads. A knife is then thrust into its neck so that its blood will rush from its body through a ripped jugular vein. That same knife later slices their heads ear-to-ear and their skin is peeled back, exposing the muscle still glistening with blood.

No life should be so blatantly brutalized. This perversity can no longer be tolerated. Leather is a violent assault on life and needs to be recognized as such.

Garage punk masses inspired despite thin crowd

By ARI VAIS
Collegian Staff

Themasses
The Hatch
April 24

The beer was a little warm, the turn-out was poor, the band started late, but . . . ladies and gentlemen, we believe we have a winner!

I had the privilege of seeing Themasses, at the Hatch on Monday night. Garage rock at its tightest, Themasses were the epitomy of punk with brains, thrash with a sense of humor, ballsy rock'n'roll without a false sense of machismo, and a good sense of self-parody - the way punk was meant to be.

But before I noticed any of that, I was struck by how perfectly tight this group was. Reluctant front man Tom Merchant later told me that they, minus drummer James Dean had been playing together for over seven years - which explains the tight sound. They sound-checked with "Last train to Clarksville," which, if nothing else, was a hilarious thing to hear, and then broke into a fierce speed-up version of Neil Young's "Cinnamon Girl."

The show was terribly underpromoted, and the small audience consisted primarily of various "phudsters," members of the defunct Velvet Jesus (to whom the show was dedicated) and members of the band's family. Not unlike Husker Du, Themasses are a group with a harsh, abrasive sound underneath which are some pretty righteous hooks, and all around good songwriting. Almost every tune featured nice, sloppy background vocals from brothers Jim and Anthony Frogameni on guitar and bass respectively, which always adds to a tune's catchiness. It was clear that Themasses influences included hard bands like the Stooges and The Who, but also very melodic bands like early Floyd as well as the Beatles. In fact they covered two Beatles songs, "Sun King" and "Birthday", and Pink Floyd's "Corporal Clegg," which not only is a song that I still can't get out of my head, but also featured a witty kazoo solo by Merchant.

Themasses have enough worthy material of their own for a fantastic first album, and it's frustrating to see them, hear them play these songs, knowing that they don't even have a demo tape. All their originals were tight, high-strung and angry sounding, from the silly but vicious "Mean Mr. Main Vein," to the lonely, Floydean "Wrong," to the chilling "My Gun Too," Themasses' answer to Lou Reed's "Heroin."

All the songs were perfect slam dancing material, but those at the Hatch knew to stay collected, keeping in mind that such actions might mean a swift end to the show. However, the electric level of energy never subsided and I am still impressed with the originality, wit and tightness of this band.

Tom Merchant didn't seem to share my enthusiasm about his group. Before the show, he admitted to having severe stage fright, and seemed almost ashamed about the lyrical content of some of the songs (one especially tight number was about porn star Ron Jeremy). Talking with Tom about Themasses was like being with a beautiful girl who thinks she's ugly. They have no gigs in the immediate future, mostly because they haven't looked. In any case, be sure to keep an eye out.

Physical humor and creative props spice Ubu The King

By MICHAEL T. PUOPOLO, II
Collegian Correspondent

Did you ever do something really weird and also hysterically funny? Well, that's what Ubu the King is like. It is a French play written by Albert Jarry about the conquering of Poland by an incompetent king and his overbearing wife. Although it may sound strict, militant and dramatic, Ubu the King is extremely irrational, nonsensical, illogical, and hilariously funny.

I have never seen a production quite like Ubu, and must admit that I am impressed with it. There were few slow spots in the production, the directing is interesting and quite unique, and there is just as much physical humor as there is verbal.

The set is simplistic, yet effective. The three mobile ramp-platforms are adequately used in the scenes, and the props (rubber gloves, pin-pong balls, arms, legs, magic wands) are all funny representations of actual threatening objects.

THEATER

The lighting design is nothing fance, but it gets the job done. At times, is seems that the actors have trouble finding their exact light spots, and were sometimes left in shadows. The special effects, including a flying fourteen-year-old, and more smoke than the R.J. Reynolds company produces in one year, complement the overall design of the play.

The most interesting and creative technical aspect of the play were the costumes. The designer put a great deal of time and effort into the look of the costumes relative to the play. Although the sound design was unique, it has the tendency to be noisy an annoying, and can be quite distracting to the audience as well.

The acting itself was curious. Outstanding performances were given by Shea Salyer as Buggerlas, Monica Stancil as Mama Ubu, and Anne Von Herrman as Barbage. These women all had a great deal of presence, and were consistently amusing throughout the play. The more minor characters played by the chorus also deserve a mention, for despite the size of their parts, they provided quite a few amusing moments.

Overall, Ubu the King is way off the beaten path, but is funny once one becomes engrossed. A production this unique will probably not be performed in this area for some time, so treat yourself to a little weirdness.

Tickets are available at the Theater 14 Box Office before the show. The show completes its second week April 26th-29th, all performance times are at 8 p.m., and tickets are $2. As Papa Ubu is famous for saying: "Shitski!"

Thirty books later Burgess still hasn't had enough

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Staff

Any Old Iron
Anthony Burgess
Random House

Anthony Burgess has a new book out. This is a big deal because this ridiculously proficient writer is so good at finding entertaining ways to express his fascinating ideas. While John Updike and his ilk are firmly established as the Top 10/Madonna type of literature, Burgess is actually doing something of worth with words. And what's amazing is that he gets recognized for it and, he's been doing his thing for years.

BOOK REVIEW

"After some thirty novels, people say 'isn't that enough?' . . . But there's nothing else to do . . . the form is so difficult, one is never satisfied," Burgess says. And he's off again. Best known to we kiddies for his masterpiece of a virtually contemporary A Clockwork Orange, Burgess has long been interested in the position of the individual in society. But in Any Old Iron, his first major novel since Earthly Powers in 1980, he pits the individual against history; and the desires of the individual against himself.

Forty years of European history, including at least three wars, are the canvas of the book. The colors he employs through the characters of David Jones and his subsequent offspring perfectly express Burgess' well thought out ideas and heartfelt convictions.

The journey the book demands that we take through the author's subconscience begins with David Jones surviving the wreck of the Titanic, described as "a perfect exhibition of the modern blind trust in mere material and appearances." This could be a nod towards Updike, if an author as important and as good as Burgess were to waste his time on such paltry matters.

The charcter correctly views the disaster as a "judgement on the rich." Jones goes through the First World War in an attempt to find something. He is not satisfied by his experience.

This is a book about human appetites - for the tangible (i.e. food especially, and of course, sex) and for the symbolic. On education, Jones says; "I wanted an explanation . . . of the kind of world we are living in . . . and I did not get it."

The book continues with Jones' offspring going through the Civil War and the Second World War as well as the Welsh nationalistic cause. The Any Old Iron is supposedly the sword of Excalibur, though this is not believed by the characters. The sword is, however, a symbol for justice and truth and beauty. Here's a quote from the book that captures the main point; "Food's what matters, people will always eat and always have done what history's kindly permitted them to. Melt the sword down and make knives and forks out of it."

While our desires for the intangible are generally unanswered, they do spur us on. But the character of Reginald, great appreciater of food, loses the sense of smell, and thus of taste, through searching for some meaning; and he ends up sinking the two major symbols of the novel, including the sword.

"I don't think there's any optimism in the book, except the scent of oranges and tangerines at the end," Burgess has said of the book. He writes: "The citrus fruits outlived them (the individuals) as they would outlive the law of Moses. It was a pity that Reg had lost his sense of smell."

The main point of this novel is stunningly apparent in bold color, the author's philosophy coming close to creating a masterpiece of art. He misses by the lack of coherence in the novel through the fact that his philosophy takes the book over, at the cost of character and plot. But, while the Updikes of this world have such technicalities down pat, they can't put a finger to the brilliance of Burgess' remarkably clear perception. "What is history but slashing the innocent with a sword?"

field for an extra two runs.

UMass made one weak attempt at a rally in the eighth when Bright deposited his own shot into the crowd beyond the left-field fence. But two base runners after him were left stranded. That took whatever wind out of the Minutemen's sails and they fell quietly in the ninth.

One of the few bright spots of the game for UMass was the play of Chambers, who was putting his first start at first base. He contributed error-free ball and played the corner smoothly, making several good stops.

But Stone would have to look long and hard to find much else to smile about and he wasn't doing much smiling yesterday.

While Amherst College is no slouch as a ballclub, Stone attributed the problem to his own team.

"We stunk. If we played well, like we're capable of playing, we should beat them. But if we play lousy and we can't get anybody out and you don't hit the ball, you don't win. It doesn't matter how good you are or what kind of talent you have."

One problem which has been a recurring theme this season has been the Minutemen's lack of leadership.

"Its tough," said Stone,"because these people who we ask to be leaders have never been in a leadership role before. They aren't coming through."

Hopefully for UMass, they learn the role soon.

Habs await next opponent

MONTREAL (AP) — Bobby Smith, the Montreal Canadiens center, watched hockey on television yesterday, and relaxed. It sure beat practicing at the Forum and travelling to Boston.

That was a reward for the Canadiens after they had eliminated the Bruins a night earlier to win their Adams Division final in five games.

Montreal next will play either the Pittsburgh Penguins or the Philadelphia Flyers in the Wales Conference finals starting Monday night at the Forum, and coach Pat Burns told the players that practice would not start until today.

"I'm just looking forward to sitting back and relaxing," Smith said. "There are things we can work on, like the power play, while we're waiting for the Patrick Division to sort itself out."

Like Smith, Bob Gainey, the Canadiens captain, said he has no preference as to the team's next opponent.

"My mind can't flip over that fast," Gainey said when asked about the next round. "I just wanted us to be well-rested and ready to play Monday."

Burns, repeating a comment by his assistant coach Jacques Laperierre that "the most difficult thing in the series is getting out of your own division," said he expected a different style of play in the conference final.

her at second on another Duff bunt. After Wanner was forced at third, Duff scored on a single by Jenn Vaillancourt. Miller walked to load the bases and with two out, Meehan singled to right, scoring Bonnie Schilling and Vaillancourt.

That was more than enough of a pad for freshman phenom Holly Aprile, who allowed just one hit while striking out six. Rhode Island scored a run off when freshman reliever Jen Devlin hit the first two batters she faced and the third reached on an error.

This prompted coach Elaine Sortino to bring Aprile back in from left field and with come nice defensive help from the infield, UMass was able to regroup and end the game.

The second game started with a Rhode Island scare as the first two batters reached on singles. But Aprile turned a hard line drive into a double play and struck out the next batter to end the inning.

UMass got a run in the first but did most of its damage in the third, when it scored five times.

Singles by Dellanno and Miller started the rally off and after one-out singles by Collins and Aprile, UMass had already scored one run and still had the bases loaded for Wanner. Wanner hit a sacrifice fly that brought Miller in from third. Duff came up and, despite a sore back that demanded ice throughout the game, singled up the middle to score Collins and Aprile. Schilling brought in Duff with a single of her own to make it 6-0.

The real story was the pitching of Aprile, who didn't allow a hit between the second and sixth innings.

"It's the basics that are killing us," Hartman said. "It's throwing and catching and everything. And we all have the basics. We don't know why we can't execute in games because we do it all the time in practice. It's frustrating, but now we can hopefully turn into the spoilers, maybe upset a few teams down the line."

With the graduation of Amy Robertson and Posy Seifert as well as goalie Pam Stone last year, the defense was left with some major gaps to fill.

Then junior Michele Pytko went down with a knee injury during basketball season and was lost for the entire year. It was a big blow to Bossio's defense.

Pytko had picked up a lacrosse stick for the first time last year, but she quickly learned the game and worked herself into the starting lineup by the end of the season.

"Michele plays with the same mentality as Lynn, tough on defense, aggressive to the ground ball," Bossio said. "She worked really well with Lynn. Her and Lynn really were the mainstay of our defense last year."

"It would help having her back," Hartman said. "Towards the end of the season, she was really picking it up and she understood what she had to do."

With Pytko gone, Hartman was the only defender left from last year's squad. Bossio was forced to field five freshmen and Hartman as her defense.

There have been a lot of rookie mistakes and it's fair to say that they have cost the Gazelles some games. Hartman is patient though. Her leadership off the field as well as on has held this team together.

"She's always willing to help," Bossio said. "She's always giving people confidence, patting them on the back, helping them with the little things. She'll always take time for people."

She's the consummate team player. But sometimes, Hartman tries to give too much and that has taken away from her own play. Hartman plays a vital role out there but when she needs to come to the rescue of another player, the defense breaks down.

"Lynny has always gotten by toughest assignment," Bossio said. "I usually put her on the toughest attack player. Sometimes, Lynny does a great job at it. Other times, she worries too much about what's going to happen behind her that she's not able to do her jobs."

The defense has been stingy in some games and nonexistent in others. That's a sign of youth. Hartman is a step ahead of the others. Her real talents really have not been displayed.

"She hasn't played her best only because she's concerned about what's going on around her," Bossio said. "She would be so much better with an experienced defense around her."

■ men's track

would be taking a chance of reinjury by sprinting in the shorter races. However, O'Brien said Brown will be okay to run a leg in the 4x400, consisting of the same team as in the shorter relays, and will replace Grey.

Brown will also run the 400 leg in the distance medley. In the other three legs, Jim McDonald will run the 800, Steve Tolly will do the mile, and Herb Heffner will run the three quarter mile. The sprint medley consists of four legs, an 800, a 400, and two 200s. Fitz Hagan will do the 800, with Vaughn running the 400, and Grey and DeLaRosa each doing a 200. UMass should perform very well in the short relays, in which the men are consistently strong, but may have trouble in the longer relays and the medleys, in which they are not as balanced.

Along with all the advantages of competing in such a top-level meet comes a disadvantage. The Eastern Track Championships take place the next weekend, followed by New England Championships the weekend after. By going to Philadelphia, UMass loses the opportunity to qualify more athletes in events for Easterns and New Englands.

"The Gardeners of Eden"

Modern understanding of the deleterious effects of civilization on the environments of this planet has fostered nostalgia for "wilderness." Prehistoric archaeology reveals the complexities of human relationships to biological and physical systems through a million years before cities. Long-term perspectives demonstrate that human evolution is inextricable from the dynamism of the planetary systems.

Defense leads Gorillas, 12-4

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — It was only fitting that, in defense of the New England championship, it was the defense that rose to the task.

The backliners, those guys who rarely get the credit because their names are usually absent from the scoring column, stood out loud and clear yesterday as the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team thwarted Harvard University, 12-4 at Ohiri Field.

Sal LoCascio made 17 saves yesterday to lead the Gorillas to a win over Harvard and the New England Championship.

The victory makes the Gorillas the first team in the country to reach 10 wins (10-1). They have now won seven in a row since their disheartening one-goal loss to Cornell, and are unbeaten in their last 25 outings against New England teams. Yesterday's win also assured UMass its fourth consecutive New England title.

And it all stemmed from an all-around defensive effort that left the Crimson (5-6) shaking their heads after their fifth straight loss.

"Our defense was great," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "Sal [goaltender LoCascio] had one of his best games, and Ricky Mullins was superb."

Mullins, a freshman, had the honor of shadowing Harvard's leading scorer, Mick Cavuoti. Drawing the Steve Kasper-like assignments of guarding the opponent's best players, Mullins responded by holding Cavuoti without a point.

"I just tried to play him conservative," Mullins said.

Harvard coach Scott Anderson moved Cavuoti to midfield in the second half to try and shake him free. But the other defenders, like Tom Bonnet, Eric Muench, Hugh O'Callahan, Adam Rodell, Shane Kielmeyer, Mario Lopez and Jeff Salanger, all were equal to the task against Cavuoti and his supporting cast. Most of the shots Harvard got off were forced, and its goals came primarily in transition.

Only junior middie Perry Dodge (isn't that part of the Daffy Duck-Robin Hood routine — perry, dodge, spin, thrust, thwack? anyway . . .) slipped through the cracks, getting a hat trick.

But his offense wasn't enough, as the Gorillas finally cranked up the offense, firing 59 shots on goal.

It wasn't evident after the first half, when the Gorillas only led, 4-3. Paul Ganci scored twice and Scott Hiller and Rob Codignotto once each in the opening 30 minutes. But that would all change in the second half. There were no riling halftime speeches from Garber, just some words of encouragement.

"We could have been up 10-3 if we were hitting our shots," Garber said. "Once we started hitting the net we were fine."

"He just told us to be patient, to keep doing what we were doing," said LoCascio, who finished with 17 saves.

So they kept firing, and soon the Crimson were only an afterthought.

Tim Soudan rifled a shot under the crossbar off a Ganci feed 2:46 into the half to make it 5-3. Dodge responded 23 ticks later for his third, but from there LoCascio and Co. barred the door.

Soudan broke free for another shortly thereafter, and a pair of patented behind-the-head goals from Jim McAleavey and a Hiller tally made it 9-4 after three.

Minutemen thrashed, 11-5

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Staff

As University of Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone walked off the field yesterday after his team dropped a game to Amherst College, 11-5, he could only shake his head.

On Tuesday against Central Connecticut, the Minutemen looked as sharp as they had in a while. But yesterday was a complete turn-around as UMass fell to 16-19 on the year.

"I'm so frustrated right now," said Stone. "One time we show up, we play hard, we play well. The next day, we stink."

At the start, the Minutemen looked as though they would continue their success from the day before. Drew Seccafico (3-for-5 with a double and a run scored) led off the game with a sharp liner into the right-center gap for a double, took third on a wild pitch and crossed the plate on Mike Chambers' grounder to short.

The success was not to last long however. The Lord Jeffs jumped all over UMass starter Rich Graham (0-4, 9.30 earned run average) in the bottom half of the same inning. Amherst got five runs on three singles and a pair of doubles and the Minutemen quickly assumed the role of playing catch-up.

They began to work on the lead in the next inning when Brian Bright (2-for-3, a home run and two runs scored) drew a lead-off walk and took second on Glen DiSarcina's bunt single. Both runners advanced on a wild pitch and Bright came around on Derek Dana's grounder to second. DiSarcina followed on a grounder to third by Tom Murray.

After Dan O'Leary replaced Graham in the second and temporarily stifled the Jeffs, UMass added another in the third. Chambers reached first on a fielder's choice, stole second and went to third on the catcher's throwing error, and scored on a sacrifice fly by Steve Kern, pulling UMass within 5-4 after three frames.

But just as the Minutemen were clawing their way back into the game, Amherst came up with another big inning, this time scoring four runs in the fifth. The Jeffs tagged O'Leary for four consecutive singles and were helped by a big error by Bright in left field.

That would provide all the scoring Amherst needed but it added some insurance in the seventh. After giving up a leadoff single, O'Leary then watched an offering placed ungently over the fence in right-center

A veteran Gazelle. . .

Senior Lynn Hartman anchors the back six

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

She is the old veteran field general. She answers only to University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Patti Bossio. For four years, she has had to verbally direct the defense in front of her.

After last season however, all of Lynn Hartman's troops were either discharged or injured in battle. She was the sole survivor. This year she was sent fresh troops to command, right out of high school.

Hartman has had to teach them the ropes. Each game brings a new lesson. Each practice, a new solution is sought. But even the four-year starter has not seen everything.

"It's a learning experience for me too because everybody's from all different high schools and different coaches so I have to get used to what they understand," Hartman said. "Sometimes I don't think they hear me on the field."

This season has brought a lot of frustration to the Gazelles. UMass has lost more battles than it has won. Its record now stands at 2-9 going into the last weekend of the schedule."

But the Gazelles are still standing and a big reason for that is Hartman. Her corps knows that and has nothing but respect for the Boyertown, Pa. native.

"She's always positive with us," freshman defender Cindy Dolce said. "She always makes us feel that we can do it. She's very patient against her opponent. She takes her time and she knows what she's doing."

Hartman is not used to losing. In each of the previous three seasons that she has worn the Gazelle uniform, UMass won at least as many games as it lost. With two games left in the 1989 season though, the Gazelles cannot reach the .500 mark.

Hartman will end her career at UMass on Sunday when the Gazelles take on Northwestern University. There are no post season tournaments on the line for UMass but a win would be sweet for Hartman.

Softball sweeps Rhode Island

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Correspondent

And on it goes. The University of Massachusetts softball team swept its second doubleheader in as many days with a pair of 7-1 wins over the University of Rhode Island to improve its record to 22-14 on the season.

In the first game, Cherie Dellanno led off with a single off the Rhode Island pitcher's shin. Jennifer Miller tried to sacrifice Dellanno over to second, the Rhode Island firstbaseman opted to try for second and when the throw was late, both runners were safe.

Barbara Meehan sacrificed both runners over tand Dellanno scored on a sacrifice fly by Chris Collins for a 1-0 UMass lead.

The second inning saw the UMass bats do more damage. Christine Wanner led off with a lash to right field and Mary Duff got a bunt single to put runners on first and second. With two out, Dellanno walked to load the bases for Miller, who hit a grand slam in the first game of Tuesday's doubleheader.

With the wind blowing in, nobody was thinking of a homer but Miller delivered something almost as good, a bloop single to left field. When the left fielder threw the ball over the backstop, all UMass runners scored and Miller went to third.

The Minutewomen scored three more in the sixth and again it was Wanner who started it off with a single. She was safe at second when Rhode Island could not force

Minutemen head south to run in Penn Relays

Starting today and running through Saturday, around 10 thousand track competitors from all over the United States will congregate in Philadelphia to take part in the University of Pennsylvania Relay Carnival, better known as the Penn Relays. How much racing is done in 36 hours of competition? They say that on the average there is one race every six minutes.

The Penn Relays is an annual meet open to any male or female high school, collegiate, or amateur track athlete who can qualify. The University of Massachusetts men's track team will send 11 athletes to race in Philly, and coach Ken O'Brien sees this as an opportunity to compete with the best. "It's basically the highest level of high school and college competition" said O'Brien, "We try to go down and give ourselves as much competition at that level as possible."

Reinardo Flores and Jerry Squires will be the first men to compete for UMass, both running in the 5000 meters. Flores, whose flexibility allows him to compete in any distance event, from the 800 on, should be able to hold his own. Squires placed third in the 5000 in New Englands during the indoor season.

Tomorrow is the final day of competition for UMass, which has no one competing Saturday. UMass will run in five events, the 4x100, the 4x200, the 4x400, the sprint medley, and the distance medley. In the 4x100 and 4x200 O'Brien will go with the team of Felix DeLaRosa, Garfield Vaughn, Mike Grey, and Evon Walters.

The Minutemen will be without anchorman Steve Brown in the short relays. Brown is nursing a sore hamstring, and

Kennedy criticizes Bush commitment to education

Urges students to fight for affordable education

Sen. Edward Kennedy

US Sen. Edward Kennedy brought more than 500 people to their feet last night after a rousing speech in the Student Union ballroom where he blasted President Bush's policies on domestic issues and urged students to fight for an affordable education.

After a brief introduction by University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Kennedy, a veteran senator who was elected to his fourth term last year, said his visit was "five months late," referring to his failure to attend a UMass Democratic party rally last November.

Six UMass police officers and Kennedy's bodyguards maintained security for the event, but only a handful of protesters from the UMass Republican Club stood outside of the ballroom during the hour-long speech.

Kennedy said the nation's commitment to education has declined significantly in the past eight years under President Reagan, and added that little improvement has been made by President Bush, who increased the budget by only two percent.

"It's difficult to believe that in a trillion dollar budget, only three percent of that budget is education," he said. "I think the citizens of our state wouldn't understand it."

The burden of college loans forces graduates who would otherwise be committed to community service, teaching or nursing, to focus on attaining highly paid positions.

"We've gone from grant programs to loan programs. That has had a profound impact on our society," Kennedy said. "Out of every dollar that is spent at the local level, the federal government pays only six cents of that dollar."

"Until we're able to change the attitude and atmosphere on that issue, we are not going to be able to regain our competitiveness, at home or overseas," he said.

Kennedy criticized the Bush administration's failure to approach domestic issues, such as increasing the minimum wage, focusing more attention on other affairs including aid to the Nicaraguan Contras and savings and loan programs.

With cuts looming, senate committee grills Jenifer

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The Senate Ways and Means Committee yesterday grilled Board of Regents Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer for over an hour, in what many say was a missed opportunity to further public higher education's budgetary cause.

"There were some [college] presidents there who felt he didn't answer some questions as well as he could have," said Richard Conners, assistant director of state relations for the University of Massachusetts.

"I was not encouraged," said Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice.

One criticism was Jenifer's lack of specific knowledge when answering direct questions, such as how many staff members would be laid off if the current state House of Representatives' version of the budget was approved by the state Senate.

"How could you not have the figures on layoffs based on the house budget," asked Committee Chairwoman Senator Patricia McGovern (D-Lawrence).

Jenifer, who went before the audience of college presidents and chancellors for some answers, defended the Regents, saying the situation was still under study by many colleges and Universities and the figures were not available yet and the Trustees only meet once a month.

"Somebody say to the Trustees 'could you please have a special meeting,'" McGovern retorted.

Jenifer, who was part of the first of three speakers panels to be heard, said sometimes the best interests of the board are not served by giving exact figures.

"It's my experience that if I come before this committee you want answers that I can live by. If I say x number of people will be cut next year, you want to see them gone," he said.

"The committee is in a tough situation," said Conners, who was present for the hearing at Central High School in Springfield. "According to the [state] constitution they can't raise taxes," he said. "The only revenue they can work with is what they see right now. They need us to come up with specifics."

Jenifer did say that if the budget is cut accessibility will be hurt for the second year in a row.

"Massachusetts in its history has never turned down students. And for the first time, Massachusetts turned down 2,900 [students] last year — that is a disgrace," he said.

He said also that last year's budget cuts caused 375 part-time faculty throughout the system to be laid-off and 300 courses at UMass to be eliminated.

The question of financial aid was dealt with swiftly by Jenifer who said there will be no shift in aid from private college students to public.

Thirty-two percent of the $84 million in state financial aid is earmarked for public institutions, said Senator Mary Paudula (R-Lunenburg).

"I am calling the shots and the answer [to that question] is no," he said.

Jenifer also spent time apologizing for the amount of effort expended on the UMass reorganization plan dispute between the Trustees and Regents.

"Unfortunately Senator, we have spent to much time on studying the organization of the University of Massachusetts," he said.

The issue of where revenue is to be generated was put forth by Senator Lou Bertonazzi (D-Milford) who wanted to know the connection between tuition retention, fees and the present budget situation.

Body of UMass alum identified

The body of a University of Massachusetts alumni that was found in thicket near the entrance of Warren McGuirk Stadium Wednesday was identified yesterday.

Thomas F. Sullivan Jr., 57, had been dead since mid-November, according to Thomas Smith, Springfield medical examiner, who said Sullivan was last seen alive at a University of Massachusetts football game at that time.

No evidence of foul play was found, Smith said. "Sullivan died of a long ongoing illness," he said.

Sullivan had eight addresses in Amherst and Northampton, Hopkins said.

Sullivan was enrolled at UMass from February 1964 through May 1969 and again from September 1970 through January 1971. His file was reactivated in February 1987 when he received a Bachelor of Arts in education, according to Stacey Chase, UMass spokeswoman.

Debate on Anthrax ban continues at hearing

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

The debate over military-funded research at the University of Massachusetts this week moved from campus demonstrations to a town Board of Health hearing.

The board is considering a ban on all research funded by the Biological Defense Research Program, a Department of Defense project that supports a study in the UMass microbiology department.

The health board made no decision on the ban at the Wednesday night hearing, but will meet again at 5 p.m. May 11 and will then issue its ruling, said board member Diana Stein.

At the hearing, representatives from the groups opposed to the research and from the University spoke to a standing room only crowd at the Bangs Community Center.

The audience of about 100 had been listening to arguments from both sides for an hour, when about 50 protesters filed in and raised their fists, many of them the same people involved in the occupation of Memorial Hall.

Representatives from the American Friends Service Committee, which petitioned the board for the ban, said the study is a health threat because of its military funding.

"The Biological Defense Research Program is interested only in those microorganisms that are potentially useful as biological weapons," said Dr. Richard Novick, director of the Public Health Research Institute and a

Campus supports fashion designer

By THOMAS MAMBANDE

"Carlton's last show was great," said UMass sophomore Derrick Washington, referring to "C. Omar," the designer who will once again showcase his acclaimed designs at 7 p.m. Sunday in the Student Union Ballroom.

"It was a real breakthrough in terms of getting members of the Third World community together to create something beautiful. I'm sure that this year's show will be at least as good," said Washington.

Carlton Omar Spence, whose stage name is C. Omar, is a 21 year-old senior fashion marketing major. Sunday's fashion show, which features 23 UMass student models, a hair show by Helene's Hair-Um, an African dance piece and two vocalists performing an original piece, will be Spence's third fashion show in three years.

"The campus has definitely given me it's support," he said. "I appealed to different RSO groups, including Afrik-Am, the main sponsor." Other sponsors include: the Commuter Area Government, the Board of Governors, the Student Government Association Finance Committee, the Fashion Marketing Department and the Special Activities Support Fund.

Newman seeks $1 mil. new look

The Newman Center is trying to raise $1 million to give itself a much-needed facelift.

"The funds will refurbish the Newman Center and make it more handicapped accessible," according to Sister Mildred Marengo. The Capital/Endowment Fund was launched by the Newman Center staff because of "apparent need" Marengo said. She said the funds will make the present space more useful and usable.

These changes will include an elevator for the handicapped, handicapped accessible bathrooms, refurbishment of the lounges, chapel and offices of the Newman Center, according to the resident director, Father Joseph Quigley. Quigley also said expanded parking facilities are being considered.

Marengo described the drive as a gesture of goodwill and appreciation on the part of the supporters of the Newman Center. The drive has already collected $80,000 in pledges from the Amherst community and Catholic University of Massachusetts faculty, and is now asking for student support in the sum of a $20 donation. The drive for this donation is this Sunday, April 30, Marengo said.

"The Newman Center has existed for over 25 years to meet the spiritual, psychological, and emotional needs of persons here," Marengo said. "The Capital Drive is an effort to continue this through the 21st century."

Quigley said, "The greatest contribution we make is not academic, it is that we are a center of warmth."

"The Newman Center is truly an ecumenical center," he said. "There are students, support groups, and other religious affiliations that depend on the Newman center as a home."

This drive is expected to last five years, with ongoing renovations that are expected to last a decade, said Marengo.

UM students pressing China for reform

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Wibo Gong wants to help keep the people of China informed.

Gong, an assistant professor in the University of Massachusetts Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, is one of about 10 Chinese students and faculty at the University trying to raise funds to help start the first independent newspaper in their homeland.

Gong said although Communist theory dictates that the government represents the interests of the people, this is not the case in China. Government control of the media distorts the student call for democracy, he said.

> "Corruption (in the Chinese government) results from the fact that they don't carry out political reform."
> -Wibo Gong, UMass assistant professor

"Corruption [in the Chinese government] results from the fact that they don't carry out political reform," he said. "They don't let people have freedom of speech, so there's no one to check the government's actions."

Liang-Gong He, a graduate student in the UMass Department of History, said the effort began last week when a resurgence of student protests occurred in Beijing. Tens of thousands of students demonstrated yesterday in the most recent wave of student protests. The resurgence began 11 days ago as students were mourning the death of Hu Yaobang, a reformist and former party leader. Protests in Beijing have been nonviolent while demonstrations in the cities of Xian and Changsha have led to riots, mostly among nonstudents.

Gong said the students, who support a democratic system, have been trying to raise money for a non-governmental news publication.

Jun Liu, a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of English, said the student protests are the most significant support for the installment of a Chinese democratic system in over 40 years.

"This is different from the Cultural Revolution led by Mao [Tse-Tung]," he said. "This time the whole thing was initiated by the students before the workers joined in."

Several other universities in the United States, like Harvard and Purdue, are also gathering donations for the student publication, according to Matthew Huang, a Ph.D. candidate in the UMass Department of Biochemistry.

Huang said the fundraising effort here at UMass has been complicated by technical problems. the fundraisers have had a difficult time setting up a foundation savings account for the funds they receive, he said.

Two days ago, the Chinese government issued a statement that stated the aim of the protesters was "to poison people's minds, create national turmoil and sabotage the nation's political stability."

Ben Xu, also a Ph.D. student in the English Department, said the student movements are merely a non-violent attempt to "pluralize" the political structure of that nation.

"This is a reform initiated by the people, not a particular sector within the government," said Xu. "This time it is a grass-roots political movement."

UM measles spread unlikely

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts should not fear an outbreak of measles, said Dr. David Kraft, director of Health Services at UMass.

"We've had only one case reported [at UMass]," he said. "And, knock on wood, the incubation period passed [yesterday]."

Kraft said he does not consider one or two cases to be an outbreak.

"There are usually one or two cases reported each year," he said.

However, Kraft said people who had the measles when they were 12 months to 15 months old should consider being reimmunized, because this early immunization may not last them for life.

"Recent research of people immunized at a young age show a significant portion of them don't have enough antibodies to fight measles," he said.

In spite of the three cases reported at Smith College early this week, Kraft said the UMass case is probably related to cases reported in Boston, which were contracted by students on spring break in Florida.

Kraft said he is not worried about the virus spreading from Smith to UMass because "it's something that's been pretty well contained there."

Kraft said the only time UMass was concerned about an outbreak was in 1985, when a number of cases were reported in Boston.

"We have been lucky enough not to have the number of cases that other schools have had," he said.

Senate approves allotment for UVC

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A $5,500 allotment from the Undergraduate Student Senate is helping the University Video Center clear the first hurdle toward securing a cable television channel in the campus system, scheduled to be installed in 1990.

After considerable debate during Wednesday night's Senate meeting, the SGA agreed to finance a video camera, which will allow UVC to update its equipment in preparation for the student-run channel.

Sen. Scott Lever, assistant to the student trustee, said yesterday that financial assistance from the senate is essential to insuring the station's existence in the system.

"It's important that we show the administration support for a student channel," he said. "If they don't see the support within the senate, they won't assign us one."

Lever said the Telecommunications Project is a three-part process, involving a new telephone service featuring call-waiting and a less expensive long-distance service.

The system, costing $21 million for installation, will also provide computer hookups for dormitory phones, he said,

Speaker interrelates forms of Black thought

By JOSEPH L. HILL JR.
Collegian Staff

Black nationalism, Black separatism and all other forms of Black political thought are connected, and should be viewed as such, Dr. Lenworth Gunther said last night to a packed house in the Campus Center.

Gunther, founder and president of Edmedia Associates Inc., a consulting firm specializing in communications and multicultural awareness, told 200 people that the different political ideologies of Black leaders throughout history are interrelated.

The United Negro Improvement Association, founded in the 1920s by devout Christian Marcus Garvey, and the Nation of Islam, founded by Elijah Muhammed, are historically seen in two different lights because one is considered to be a Black nationalist organization and the other a religion, he said.

But the two are directly related because Muhammad, who once participated in the UNIA, modified Black nationalism with some of the practices of the Islamic religion, he said.

"Highlight the continuity, not the disjointing of thought" of the ideologies of Black political leaders, Gunther said.

Gunther said the unparalleled popularity of Martin Luther King caused many to overlook the contributions of past Black leaders who "were never given their historical due," since their efforts are rarely documented in American textbooks.

"To understand that is to understand that we have unfortunately borne the excising of our history by others," he said.

"We are products of their teachings, products of the world they attempted to create," Gunther said. "We must understand who they were as Black leaders."

Gunther is a four-time Columbia University graduate receiving his doctorate in American History with concentrations in Afro-American, West African and Russian Studies.

A career educator, he has taught at both Yale and Hartford Seminary, and served as Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs in the Carter Administration.

Mired in perhaps the most troubling financial crisis in its history, UMass, under Duffey's direction, is struggling to cope with both existing and pending budget cuts.

While tuition hikes appear inevitable, Duffey said the key to affordable state education is adequate scholarship pro-

BOG approves Republican space

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Gov. Scott Jordan's prediction of a "a lot of debate" came true last night at the Board of Governors meeting, as governors discussed whether to allocate space to the Republican Club.

The space allocation committee's initial decision to deny space to the Republican Club was due in part to W. Greg Rothman's presentation of wine and cheese to committee members at the March hearing, Jordan said.

Although the Board questioned whether Rothman was a Republican Club representative, several governors, including Gov. Stephen Bayer, made the point "the representative of the Republican Club [at the hearing] did not disavow Rothman's actions."

Gov. Bill Hewitt led the fight for the Republican Club.

"I don't feel the Republican Club has got a fair shake, to say the least," he said. "As a conservative student on campus, I would like to be able to find an alternative viewpoint. [The Republican Club] is a group that needs representation on campus."

In response, Gov. Angela Paquin said, "If [the Republican Club] was serious enough to ask for space, they shouldn't have treated the process as a farce."

Lisa Lupo, treasurer of the Republican Club, said she wanted to extend her apologies for Rothman's actions.

"I've come here tonight to show you that there are responsible people in the club," she said.

In a follow-up to Lupo's statement, Gov. Abigail Glodis said, "How can you judge a group of over 300 students on the actions of a handful of people who are going to be graduating this spring?"

After more debate, the Board decided to allocate Student Union 322 to the Republican Club, with the stipulation that the club would be subject to review on Nov. 1, 1989.

In other news:

- Gov. Jason Kofman said he wanted to express his disappointment with the small showing of students at the hearing yesterday in Springfield of the State Senate Ways and Means Committee.

"There were only 10 people when I got there that afternoon," he said. "That's very unfortunate, because this is our future we're talking about."

adding that several phones will be reserved for access by off-campus students.

The highlight of the plan, he said, is that all on-campus students will have cable television installed in their rooms, which will be covered by a mandatory fee costing approximately $90 per semester.

Lever said the student channel will offer invaluable career experience and opportunities to students interested in the television broadcasting sphere.

"The biggest media is video and it's only going to continue," he said. "I think it will open up a multitude of opportunities for [students]."

Liu said the money will be taken back to China by a University student who must remain anonymous since the project has been outlawed by the Chinese government.

"This is being done in absolute honesty. We're not trying to take advantage of anyone," he said.

Shihsiung Fu, a graduate student in ECE, said radio news programs by the British Broadcasting Company and the Voice of America are the only reliable news sources in China.

"In a country like China, there is no such thing as an independent newspaper," he said.

Puerto Ricans saluted as Week ends

By TOM CIAMPI
Collegian Staff

Puerto Rican artists, musicians and writers were saluted this week as the Latin American student organization AHORA sponsored Puerto Rican Awareness Week at the University of Massachusetts.

Most of the artists featured were students attending the University and area residents, according to Frances Ramos, vice-president of AHORA and a coordinator of the week.

"We wanted to highlight the work that Puerto Ricans of the area have been doing in the arts," she said. "We hope that we can raise consciousness beyond this week, and create a lasting awareness among faculty, students, and in nearby communities."

As part of the week's activities, which included art exhibits, speeches, and musical festivals, the New World theatre produced Encrucijada (Crossroads), a play portraying the Puerto Rican experience in Harlem in the mid-1950s.

The play examines the conflict between a father thankful to America for freeing the country from Spain in 1898, with his son who resents the strong American influence in Puerto Rico.

Ivan Mesnil Fernandez, who plays the role of the father, said most hispanics in the United States can easily identify with the play, and Americans can now better understand Hispanic life.

"The play discusses the pros and cons of both goverments and gives reasons why we should stay or leave," he said.

"This means the suspension only applies to the one person arrested inside the building," Hopkins said.

John S. Langford, 49, a non-degree graduate student, was arrested inside Memorial Hall and consequently suspended. Langford said he has concentrated his studies in physics math and other math courses.

"Langford was informed Tuesday by me and the Vice Chancellor personally that he was in violation of the University picketing code and would be suspended," Robert Swasey, graduate registrar said. "He was suspended the next day."

Swasey said Langford appeal the suspension through a grievance procedure if he feels the actions were unjustified.

"Of course I'm a little disappointed, and I think it's a little unfair," Langford said. "I will appeal if I hear it will be likely I'll win the appeal, if I hear I don't have a good chance of winning, then I won't appeal."

"If I had known ahead of time that I would be suspended, I would have thought twice about getting arrested," Langford said.

The "Marcus Hall Seven," the seven people arrested last Wednesday after the occupation of a laboratory in Marcus Hall were mailed letters from the Dean of Students Office informing them that they had until tomorrow to schedule a preliminary hearing with the office, Hopkins said.

Kennedy

"Restoring purchase power of those individuals at the bottom of the ladder — that item will be vetoed [by President Bush]," he said.

The United States is the only industrial nation in the world that does not provide parental leave for employees, he said, adding that he is backing legislation that would allot 10 weeks of unpaid leave with health insurance for employees who have spent more than one year at a company but must leave to care for a sick or newly-adopted child.

"We're talking about a choice the person has to make between a sick child they love and a job they need," he said.

Kennedy called Bush's day-care program "meaningless" claiming that out of 15 million children, only three percent of those under 15 will be eligible for care under the president's standards.

Health care in the United States is also lacking compared to other nations, in spite of more than 11 percent of the Gross National Product is invested in this area.

"Half of every senior citizen in a nursing home is bankrupt within six months," he said.

Kennedy urged students to participate in a national service program, where students engage in community service projects for scholarships and college credit.

grams, not low tuition.

"What's affordable obviously is different for people according to their financial situation. The state has a responsibility, but higher education can't be free," Duffey said. "The students and their families have a responsibility . . . and the question is what the mix is," he said. "I think we're seeing the state back away from its responsibility, but I don't think its responsibility just includes low tuition. If you took that position, then you'd have to say the tuitions should be low for everybody whether they could afford to pay — a very unfair system."

The fair awarding of scholarship funds should be based upon family income, number of students in the family and of course the quality of the student, he said.

"I don't think that it's realistic to expect higher education to be free. That's very unfair because some people can afford to pay more than others," he said.

The present budget crisis in mind, Chancellor Duffey's ongoing concern is keeping UMass a school that provides the best education possible, and seeing that the school remains open to people based upon their ability, not their income.

"For the last two years the basic problem has been whether the quality of education was going to decline because of the budget cuts," he said. "We have to do the best job we can with what resources we have . . . the quality of education is not something that just depends on dollars, you can spend lots of money and not get better quality."

A problem that has arisen in recent years has been incidents of uncivil behavior occurring within the University community — a community that stresses civility and social awareness. "We talk a lot about civility . . . being tolerant of differences," Duffey said. "I think that the situation that you confront continually on the campus is extremism . . . a good preparation for the society that's out there."

"People who take extremist positions on the left or on the right sometimes create problems for communities," he said.

The 1986 Southwest riot raised the question of a mandatory civility course being instituted into the curriculum. The lesson of civility is ongoing, said Duffey.

"Some people think we can teach a course and have the problem behind us. I think we always struggle . . . I don't think it's a White problem . . . I think it's a human problem."

Crew tries to raise sunken robot sub

BOSTON (AP) — The team that used an unmanned submersible to explore the Titanic wreckage tried yesterday to raise the robot's younger brother from choppy seas where it sank during a live $7 million satellite hookup to a dozen US cities.

The little explorer is scheduled to be the star of the show Monday when student audiences in 13 cities will gather at local museums to watch the robot explore the ruins of a Roman ship wrecked off the coast of Italy in 300 AD.

About 2,000 museum officials, teachers and technicians were stunned Wednesday when they tuned in to test their international hookup with the Star Hercules, and saw only some dismayed scientists holding the severed cord that had been Jason's lifeline.

Jason and its 8,000-pound mobile garage, Argo, disappeared as engineers at Turner Broadcasting Systems, Inc. in Atlanta were coordinating with control centers at 12 science museums nationwide and one in Canada.

Dr. Robert D. Ballard's crew was lowering the $1 million exploration team into 2,100 feet of water when suddenly rubber-booted marine biologists began scratching their heads and conferring just out of the camera's view.

The frayed cable came up and the crew looked on, first shocked and then increasingly pale: Jason and Argo were gone.

But a spokeswoman at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution brushed off the mishap, chalking it up to the spirit of exploration.

"This is just part of the risk and excitement in oceanography," Shelley Lauzon said from her office on Cape Cod. She said the marine explorers planned to launch a second mobile submarine to retrieve Jason and Argo.

Lauzon said the robot had fortunately fallen while in an upright position and appeared undamaged on the ocean's soft, silty floor. She said it had been located and likely would be retrieved as soon as the 3-to 4-foot waves subsided.

"The show will go on," she said. "We know these things happen at sea and are always prepared."

Paul Fontaine of Boston's Museum of Science said the science project participants were calm and that even if Jason and Argo were not recovered by Monday, a slightly less state-of-the-art backup team would be used.

Ballard — the sea explorer who in 1985 claimed the international limelight with his role in locating the Titanic — was talking live by satellite to concerned colleagues and sponsors back in North America within an hour after the robot sank.

"We've had a burp," he said, broadcasting live to North America after the pair sank Wednesday. "The cable separated and we dropped the vehicle. We have to go down and pick it up but we know pretty well where it is."

Ballard sat, legs crossed and clearly comfortable in the satellite spotlight, reassuring his audience and chatting with technicians in Atlanta as they checked the hookups between his ship's control room and the participating museums, which spent about $180,000 each on the project.

Museum officials said the project, whose sponsors include Turner, Woods Hole, Electronic Data Systems and the National Geographic Society, would go on as scheduled between may 1-14.

The participating museums include the Boston Museum of Science; the Museum of Natural History in Denver; the Detroit Science Center; the Discovery Place in Charlotte, N.C.; the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago; the Science Place in Dallas; Memphis (Tenn.) Pink Palace Museum; The Franklin Institute in Philadelphia; the Rochester (NY) Museum and Science Center; Mote Marine Laboratory in Sarasota, Fla; National Geographic Society Grosvensor Auditorium in Washington and Dallas; and the Royal British Columbia Museum in Victoria, British Columbia.

Doctors say lasers can remove tattoos

BOSTON (AP) — By zapping tattoos with a laser, doctors believe they have the first way to erase fire-breathing dragons, old girlfriends' names and other better-forgotten mementos without leaving scars.

The technique uses an intense lightbeam called a ruby laser that destroys the tattoo colors but does not harm the skin.

"I think this is the first truly non-scaring therapy for tattoos," said Dr. R. Rox Anderson of Massachusetts General Hospital.

Dr. Charles Taylor, a member of Anderson's research team, planned to present the results of the laser treatment today at a meeting of the Society for Investigative Dermatology in Washington.

Tattoos are drawn by puncturing the skin, usually with needles, and inserting pigment that remains after the wound heals over.

■ budget

Jenifer said the 1989 budget was livable until $18 million in reversions was imposed by the state causing many schools to initiate emergency fees.

"We are now working in terms of what the campuses are doing in fiscal year 1990," he said.

"We need a margin of excellence," Jenifer said referring to tuition retention, but "we are in a situation where those dollars are not for excellence but just to get by."

Jenifer said tuition retention came about as a means of sharing the cost of educating a student in proportion to the benefits received by the state and the student.

Since the state benefits the most, it shoulders 70 percent of the cost leaving the student to make up the remaining 30 percent, he said.

■ board of health discusses anthrax

molecular biologist.

The UMass study headed by Professor Curtis Thorne, which uses non-infectious forms of the Bacillus anthracis bacterium, is aimed at developing a better vaccine for the potentially deadly anthrax disease.

"[Anthrax] is the ideal biological weapon, and none better has been found," said Novick, who is an advisory board member of the Committee for Responsible Genetics.

But University representatives said the UMass policy of accepting money only for research that can be "freely and fully disclosed" guarantees the study is ethical.

"Nothing about this research is secret, no secret plans, no secret motives. To suggest otherwise is irresponsible and just plain wrong," said James Langley, associate vice chancellor for University Relations and Development.

"The campaign against the University has been one of shooting first and asking questions later," Langley said. "The facts must be respected, even if people are not."

Out of four danger levels for biological research, the anthrax study is classified at level one — the safest — as research with "little or no possibility of causing disease," said UMass environmental health and safety officer Valerie Steinberg.

Debbie Heemskerk, a graduate student working with Thorne, said a vaccine is needed for Third World countries, where anthrax kills hundreds of people and farm animals each year.

"This research is definitely in compliance with the [1972 biological weapons] treaty," Heemskirk said. "We are not conducting germ warfare in our laboratory at the University of Massachusetts."

After each side had spoken for 30 minutes on the issue, members of the audience were invited to comment.

Mary Wentworth, a 16-year resident of Amherst, compared the protest to her own activism against nuclear power plants.

"We were accused of trying to incite the public. We were accused of being hysterical," Wentworth said. "We know that as citizens we must question what is going on in our society at every level."

A former UMass employee and 27-year resident of Amherst, Dean Allen, said citizens cannot trust the defense department's assurances that the project is meant to help people.

"The American people have been misled for 20 or 30 years by the Pentagon," Allen said. "I haven't heard anything here tonight that convinces me this is a worthwhile project."

But Grace Rollason, a retired UMass zoology professor, said she was "delighted" the defense money was going toward an anthrax vaccine, rather than a project like the Strategic Defense Initiative.

"I am in complete agreement that the Department of Defense has backed some horror stories, and is still backing some horror stories. I do think their backing of Dr. Thorne is among their more benign projects," Rollason said.

"If we could develop vaccines against all diseases, biological warfare would go down the drain," she said. "If the Department of Defense is willing to use some of its funds decently, all power to Dr. Thorne for accepting them."

While the health board will now deliberate about the proposed ban, Amherst Town Meeting has also been asked to consider the issue.

The last article on the 67-item May Town Meeting warrant proposes that Amherst declare itself a "biological warfare research free zone."

If that article is approved, Town Meeting will advise the health board to adopt the proposed ban.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A prayer is answered

"I am walking much better these days . . . like about how everybody walks, practically. I am quite healthy now," Benjamin Charny told a visitor recently as he fairly sprinted across the campus of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he has a temporary research job.

Then, savoring the sharp, cold air of an early spring day — "the air of freedom," he called it — Ben Charny said, "America is such a wonderful place to be. I am so grateful, so lucky."

—Boston Globe, April 19

I said a prayer for Charny when I was a freshman; I said many prayers. I prayed to God that the Soviet Union, the "Evil Empire" that held Charny hostage while he waited for an operation only the West could provide, would allow him to emigrate.

David R. Mark

These were the days before I was a journalist. They were days when somewhere, deep in my heart, I wanted to be an activist. But most important, these were the days I spent organizing a march and rally for Benjamin Charny.

I had obviously never met him; he knew not of my existence. But there was a greater tie between the two of us. We were both fighting for human rights, and we were both Jewish.

However, though I could freely practice my religion, he could not. Though I was praised for my activism, he was condemned. I gave interviews and hoped for press coverage; he shunned the idea because he feared a prison sentence.

These were the days before Mikhail Gorbachev allowed an exodus of dissidents from the Soviet Union. That would not occur for another six months. No, in the spring of 1987 those of us who were in the Student Coalition for Soviet Jewry did not believe Charny would be released from the USSR. And yet we worked for just that.

The march and vigil did not look promising. Because of time constraints, there was only one Sunday we could hold the event — the same day as the Southwest concert.

Sure we'd compete with the concert. No problem.

But I worried when we had defectors. Soon our committee of 12 was a crew of four, and I asked of them more than I ask myself on many days. We bought blue balloons and white balloons with Charny's name printed on each. On each balloon was a message, asking the recipient of the card to write on our behalf to the Soviet Union — to Gorbachev for Charny's release.

I think no one, including the leaders of SCSJ, believed more than 20 people would attend our march and rally. Previous vigils and rallies had small attendances, and with our small organizing group, and the Southwest concert. . . .

The march was scheduled to begin at noon. At 12:15, 15 people had arrived at Haigis Mall. Channel 40 and a handful of newspapers were there, but I was concerned no one else would walk with us to the Amherst Common. Little did I know. . . .

Seventy-five people showed up for the rally. Those who had said we had no chance were now congratulating us, telling us they knew all along we would be successful.

I kown Benjamin Charny did not know of my efforts, or the efforts of similar groups across the country. Knowing he is in Boston today is thanks enough.

Somewhere a voice — perhaps God's — said "you're welcome" in my heart.

Notes from the basement

Some things have to be said. I'm going to graduate. I've been hired, so I'm going to say them.

● For those of you who haven't seen Cutback City, it is a neighborhood of shacks constructed next to the Campus Pond.

The builders and inhabitants of the city say it exists to protest state education budget cuts — hence, the name. The conspicuous poor condition of the dwellings is supposed to represent the condition of public higher education.

Rick Santos

The cause behind Cutback City is most noble, but everything else about that dump is disgusting. Simply put, it is by far the most ugly non-living thing I have ever seen on campus, including the men's bathroom on the concourse level of the Campus Center.

The slum is not just ugly, it is located in the wrong place. Why not erect a mock ghetto outside the Statehouse or on the lawn in front of the governor's house? The construction of an eyesore on campus hurts those who live and work on campus, not those who decide the state's budget.

● Earlier this month, the well-known, outspoken, campus conservative W. Greg Rothman was seen at the Top of the Campus Center lounge watching the NCAA basketball final, and twice was observed purchasing a 75 cent drink.

Who cares? Why should you keep reading? Because the story gets better.

On both occasions he asked the server to give back to him the 25 cents in change.

He may be a tightwad, but he's not a cheat. After Seton Hall, his team, lost the game Rothman was reported to have paid in full a small wager.

● What's the deal with this place on Route 9 in Hadley called Campus Pizza? Maybe I'm wrong, but it seems the place isn't near any of the Five College campuses in the area. As a matter of fact, the establishment probably isn't too far from the geographic center of the Five College Area. Maybe that's the point.

● Going way back to before spring break, we, the Collegian ran an advertisement informing students that they could sell back their books to the Textbook Annex to earn money to spend during break.

I personally am apologizing for our accepting of the ad. But I cannot apologize for the University employees responsible for selling the ad, and worse encouraging students to sell their books mid-semester. It's asking students to trade their education for, most likely, alcohol poisoning and skin cancer. Congratulations to the state's flagship university for this move.

Rick Santos is a Collegian columnist.

Pollution, accepted in society?

Exxon isn't the only villain destroying the oceans, atmosphere, and forests. Pollution is an accepted part of our society. This is unfortunate but true.

This does not mean that all pollution should be accepted. I am referring to the needless, careless, and callous polluting of the world we live in. Examples of which are much closer at hand than you may think.

You don't have to count the dead seals in Alaska, dead people in Bhopal, or miscarriages in Love Canal because the villain is right here on this campus. It's that leave-it-for-someone-else attitude.

Just look at the empty beer bottles on the grass around any dorm on a Monday morning, or the Soho bottles encircling the the Student Union any time. If that's not enough, take a look at the thousands of campaign posters left all over campus by meatheads who, only a few weeks ago, promised you the world.

Recently, however, something caught my eye. A large sheet of clear plastic, big enough to cover your car, had broken free from the dump known as Cutback City and found a new home in the campus pond where it has since floated for several weeks. It can still be observed clogging the dam in the campus pond.

The irony of it all is this plastic trash was brought onto this campus by a group of people who would have you believe that they have a monopoly on social responsibility — something they probably can't even spell. These people claim to have built these fire traps to protest budget cuts, and now that this cause isn't as trendy as getting arrested in research labs while urinating in the trash cans there. Cutback City has become ghost city. And its residents will most likely leave their mess for the UMass administration to clean up.

When I think of the self-proclaimed radicals of phony student politics here at UMass, I wonder if they got off their sorry butts and spent as much time being productive as they do sleeping in the Cape Cod lounge and needlessly destroying the lab projects of hard working students, they might actually accomplish something positive before they head to the Cape for the summer.

Robert Bright
Hadley

They said it . . .

I think knowing what you can not do is more important than knowing what you can do. In fact, it's good taste.

Lucille Ball

The Sixties, of course, was the worst time in the world to try and bring up a child. They were exposed to all these crazy things going on.

Nancy Reagan

Resident Assistant hopefuls should think twice

For those of you anxiously awaiting to hear from Residence Directors as to whether you have been selected for a Resident Assistant position, I ask you to think twice about the job you might be accepting.

I hope you realize that the actual job is much different from what you have probably been hearing. Meeting lots of great people, being the foundation of a dynamic floor environment and getting a weekly paycheck, plus a free single room are all the benefits of the job. But have they told you about the double standards that exist in the system, the ease at which RA's can be fired, or the part of the contract that reads, "other duties assigned?"

When I was hired as an RA, I was really excited about the job and looked forward to assuming the RA role. The job I accepted last year, is much different from the job I hold today.

Although the compensation has remained steady at $26.88/week, it has been my added responsibility to attend an additional meeting per week, along with my staff meetings, to put hours in for the RA selection process, to work "opening duty" for the halls after breaks and to put time in on various weekend nights to assist the RA's on duty (helping them enforce university policy).

Although additional duties vary according to specific clusters, the story is usually the same. By the way, these are all in addition to my weekly responsibilities which take up an average of 18 hours per week.

The largest discrepancies in the job are those enacted by the system itself. Upon being hired, it was my understanding that Residential Education would provide a support network to back up RA's when carrying out their duties. I must have been mistaken because I have yet to notice anything of the sort. It is common knowledge that RA's will be fired for not upholding certain aspects of the contract like "serving as a positive role model by abiding by all University, Housing Services and Residence Hall policies at all times."

Jason Kofman

Yet residents are allowed to have quite a few rule infractions before any serious action is taken against them. Problematic residents are almost never kicked out of the halls for their actions. This is perhaps the biggest double-standard in the system. Res. Ed. sees to it that the residents get more of a fair shake than their own fellow employees, the RA's do.

This is not intended to be a gripe session, but rather a direct warning to those considering accepting a position. I enjoy being around my floor and I really like all of my fellow staff members. If Res. Ed. would just let me do my job, I feel that their system would run smoother and more RA's would keep their jobs longer than two semesters.

With all these double-standards in the system, it is no wonder that there is going to be an average 80 percent turnover rate in Southwest South. Applications have been down, more RA's are leaving and Res. Ed. now finds itself in a difficult situation.

One of the biggest reasons for this drop-off is a basic lack of job security. The system in which I work is outdated and outmoded. It needs some serious revamping. This, I believe, is the general consensus with RA's across this campus, but a thought which has yet to be accepted or even considered at Res. Ed. or in Housing Services.

If you are on the verge of accepting a position, I encourage you not only to reconsider, but to turn the offer down, especially if you have other time commitments outside of academics.

The position demands many hours that are not part of the formal job description, as well as strict attendance at two semesters of RA class (which truthfully, is not that thrilling).

I was once bright-eyed and excited about the job, but after my experiences inside the system, my enthusiasm has greatly paled. It would sadden me to see another crop of quality recruits brainwashed into taking a job that had so much potential at the start, then have them brutally manipulated by the powers that be.

ARTS & LIVING

Classy Cusack can say anything and do no wrong

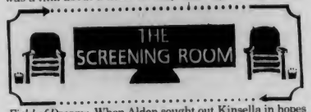
By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

There will be a preview of Field of Dreams this Saturday at the Hampshire Six cinemas. Go see it. This is one of the finest, most satisfying films since E.T.. Kevin Costner might be accused by many of going a bit overboard on "baseball movies" (after Bull Durham), but it must be said that this is not just a baseball movie. It is much more than that. It's a film about magic, about the power of dreams, about the child in the man.

Costner stars as Ray Kinsella, a man whose unresolved relationship with his late father hangs like a shroud over his life. One day, out in the cornfield that is his backyard, he hears a mysterious voice. It says, 'If you build it, he will come.' The remainder of the film sees Kinsella in dogged pursuit of an impossible dream.

You know, it's really difficult to talk about this film. I don't want to give anything away, but I want to tell you enough to get you interested. Take my word for it. See the preview on Saturday and tell all your friends. The distributor is relying primarily on word-of-mouth to sell this film.

Some interesting anecdotes about the film: It's based on a novel called "Shoeless Joe" by W.P. Kinsella (yes, it's the same last name as the protagonist). Director Phil Alden Robinson fought with the studio to keep the book's title, but the powers felt that audiences would think it was a film about a hobo. So they came up with the title,



Field of Dreams. When Alden sought out Kinsella in hopes of finding a partner in comiseration, he discovered that "Shoeless Joe" was not in fact the author's choice of title. The publisher gave the book that name. Kinsella's original title was "Dream Field."

Also: There is a character in the film played by James Earl Jones. His name is Terence Mann, and he is supposed to be the man who coined the phrase, "make love, not war." Well, this is not the same writer Kinsella portrayed in his novel. The character was changed for the film after Kinsella was approached by the lawyers of another controversial writer of the beat generation: J.D. Salinger. Salinger is a prominent character in the novel, so any "Catcher in the Rye" fans out there might want to check out "Shoeless Joe" for supplemental reading.

Another notable film playiing in the area is Say Anything. This film immediately calls to mind Rob Reiner's romantic comedy, The Sure Thing, for more than one reason. Both starred John Cusack. Both had as the central conflict a romance between two unlikely lovers, the free-spirited Cusack and The Brain.

This film, however, takes the theme and elaborates on it with remarkable candor and creativity. Charming as The Sure Thing was, it might have been a first draft for Say Anything.

Adams' new Dirk novel only gently funny

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Long, Dark Tea-time of the Soul
Douglas Adams
Simon & Schuster

The arrival of a new Douglas Adams novel is an event which millions of readers greet with anticipation ranging to such extremes that it borders on the manic. Fortunately for those manic hordes, the man responsible for, among other things, the brilliant "Hitchhiker's Guide To The Galaxy" series, has finally seen fit to grace our world with another of his highly imaginative literary expeditions.

Adams' last novel, "Dirk Gently's Holistic Detective Agency" introduced us to the character of Dirk, and his unique style of "holistic" detection, wherein Mr. Gently attempts, using methods that may seem bizarre or irrelevant to the untrained eye, to solve the whole crime (messy divorces and missing cats a specialty).

BOOK REVIEW

Mainly, he uses his Holistic Detective Agency as a means to divorce old ladies from large amounts of their money. In any event, "The Long Dark Tea-Time Of The Soul" is the second Dirk Gently novel, and very odd it is too.

This is all very well and good, but the real question that liners is: "Is Douglas Adams still funny?" The answer is a hesitant yes. Certainly, he still retains his flair for juxtaposing odd ideas. Norse gods carrying around Coke machines and worrying overly much about having clean linen is just one exapmle of his warped mind that surfaces in this current novel. A calculator that performs the I-Ching (and delivers very odd translations of the hexagrams as well) and a green-eyed giant waving a scythe and demanding mysterious contracts also appear. Ultimately, the story takes a back seat to the wonderful descriptions and Adams' purple prose.

On the down side, it seems as if Adams puts all his energy into making Dirk Gently the most charmingly weird person he could, and the rest of the characters pale into cardboard insignificance when confronted with Gently's great panache. Certainly, the Gently scenes are the most readable and humorous bits. Also in the balance department, Adams seems to enjoy creating the situation much more than resolving it, and thus the tangled and complex plot is tied up much too quickly, leaving a few loose ends and probably more than one reader scratching his or her head in confusion.

It's somewhat disappointing to see a man who produced a series of science fiction books that made millions of people laugh hysterically and brought a whole new meaning to the phrase "Don't Panic" turn out a book that is less than side-splittingly funny.

Surrender to the throbbing gristle of the Love Hoagie

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

The interview began, and Andy "Rockin' Kid Charlegmage" Stewart nursed his lukewarm beer in 127 Butterfield, Hoagie Headquarters. The place was littered with shattered bottles of Piels and Knickerbocker, and the windows vibrated as "Thunderball," one of the most tasteless songs ever written (more on that later), blasted through a low-end stereo system.

"We wanted a sound that would make people jizz in their pants" said Stewart, his voice frayed and slurred, "What jizzes in your pants? The Love Hoagie. Uh, you don't really have to use that do you?"

The Love Hoagie formed in late 1988, and will probably split up when school ends. No matter. In their four months of existence the band has taken the smallest dorm on campus by storm.

Well, at least they think so, and they are, if nothing else, the most offensive band in recent memory. And they're damn proud of it.

"I have to be a vessel for all these shitty lyrics," said vocalist Jason Malfatto, who goes by the stage name Mufaddo. "I basically don't like music; I'm just out there to piss people off."

"I consider myself like background noise, in a way," said drummer Richard "The Lion Hung" DelVechio. "That's the most important kind of noise because you're really kind of fucking it up for everyone else. It's taking the drums by the balls and bashing it out, and that's what I think do best as far as really fucking up everyone else's sense of rhythm."

If the band has any sort of calming presence it's to be found in Ned "Nuge" Diver, the bassist. Diver's the only member with short hair, and he rarely speaks above a whisper.

He was recruited because he happened to have a bass lying around in his room.

"I think bass was right for me all along," Diver said. "I had the look, I had the moves, and I had the bass."

Then there's the songs. Take "Thunderball," for example.

"Thunderball" was written about an article that Rock Kid Charlemagne had read in Hot Rodder magazine," said Bersani. "It a fit of Piels, Rock Kid and myself came up with some lyrics about this man who had injected cocaine into his penis, got a three day hardon, and then had it fall off."

Bersani and Malfatto then discussed the last Butterfield Coffeehouse, where they performed "Chi-Puck fever." The song - a cover of Ted Nugents "Cat Scratch Fever" - was inspired by those scary chicken cutlets most of get at the DC. "There were chicken pucks sewn onto that bra and onto my crotch," said Malfatto, indicaing his girlfriend Megan Noonan's brassere that dangled from the flourescent ceiling light.

Butterfield gods of rock, The Love Hoagie

"During the show, it was eaten off by one of our groupies," said Bersani, who also wore chicken pucks, "We just call her metal chick. We don't even know her name."

"Sometimes I think they take themselves a wee bit too seriously," said WMUA disk jockey Scott Limanek, who gets routinely mocked for playing the band's songs on his show. "I get scared when they use phrases like "big arenas" and "Chi-pucks" in the same sentance. You're not quoting me, are you?"

"In five years, we're gonna be in arenas," Bersani said.

"I can see the Love Hoagie in five years, well, in the same place that they are now," Lamanek said, "please don't use my name on any of this." The Hoagie just came off a triumphant concert at a debutante ball in Sunderland last Saturday, and their last concert will be at the Butterfield Coffee House next Saturday (May 6). To go is to either experience rock and roll history or be very, very offended.

The choice is clear.

Getting to grips with a miracle of modern music

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Mark Mulcahy believes there is room in music world for Miracle Legion.

The singer/frontman for the New Haven-based band is scheduled to perform at the Eastside Concert '89 on Sunday along with Burning Spear, the Untouchables and Miles. Mulcahy said modern music is divided into levels.

"Each level has a group of people that are into that particular type of music," he said. 'I think there are enough people interested in what we do to make what we're doing worthwhile."

Mulcahy and guitarist Raymond Neal have been the core members of the band whose most notable personnel change occurred in the last year. In 1985, with the help of bassist Joel Potocsky and drummer Jeff Wiedershall, the two longtime friends produced The Backyard, a delicious morsel of extended-play acoustics which failed to raise many eyebrows outside the Northeast. Potocsky was soon replaced by Steve West and in 1987, their first LP, Surprise, Surprise, Surprise, came out.

Last July, after producing another EP entitled Glad, Wiedershall and West went their own way, leaving Mulcahy and Neal to their own devices. A tour with Iceland's Sugar Cubes followed, which provided new exposure for the two musicians, Mulcahy said.

Last fall, Mulcahy and Neal recorded *Me and Mr. Ray at Prince's Paisley Park studio in Minneapolis. A February date at the Hatch gave UMass a taste of the Legion's sweet minimalism.

This Sunday's show will include a new rhythm section, Dave and Spot, whose last names are being witheld until their next of kin are notified.

Lose yourself in the king of cool

Lets Get Lost
Chet Baker
RCA/Novus

Chet Baker was a junkie with a voice; a truly beautiful clear voice filled with that smoky, ethereal void and specific heart piercing that is jazz. He also played a mutha of a trumpet and did a lot of drugs. He's due for a resurgeance in popularity due to Bruce Weber's new biographical film appropriatly titled Let's Get Lost. Weber is the man responsible for pushing Calvin Klein to the forefront of superficial advertising (a double negative) and one can only hope that Baker's voice survives Webers empty technical clever cleverness. But then, that voice somehow managed to survive the life of Baker (including getting his teeth knöcked out by vengfull drug dealers); so it's doubtful that Weber's shallowness will effect it.

RECORD REVIEW

That voice can be found on the album of the movie and it promises to be Baker's absolute final album (except for the inevitable reissues) due to his oh so romantic death in May of 1988, falling from a balcony in Amsterdam. Asked what his favourite high is by Weber he answers: 'The one that scares people to death - they call it a speedball - a mixture of coke and heroin, you know . . . but not too much coke.' Ooh how scary, talk about living on the edge. Yes it's easy to make fun of a junkie but Jesus, with a voice like his Baker should have had the ultimate high au naturel, but the spike was the high and the voice enabled it. The point is that Baker didn't even touch on what he could have done; he was too fucked up. He flies above and beyond the current standard for mediocrity and yes, his life and art do capture the superficiality of jazz beautifully but . . . .

Don't see The Cowboy Junkies show next week. Just say no because whatever those preening comatose pseudo musicians think(sic) theyr're trying to do, Baker does much better on this album. Chet Baker was the original cowboy junkie, for better or worse he lived the life, instead of acting it. And this, being an ambiguous review for vague reasons it must be stressed the voice from that life from the album from the movie cuts through all bullshit by touching the listener, by affecting YOU.

Recorded in Hollywood and Paris during the making of the film and mixed in New York (eerily perfectly timed for commercial release by his death), Baker sings and plays trumpet on such tracks as Cole Porters' 'Every Time we say Goodbye' and Duke Ellingtons' 'Daydream'. A standout on this album is his cover of Elvis Costello's 'Almost Blue' - the 80s taken back to the 50s.

I would urge you to at least listen to this album. It's called 'Lets Get Lost' and its pretty effective. Don't listen to those jazz snobs who think (instead of listening/dancing/something) Baker was nothing more than west coast 'cool' - he was much much more.

'I'll always remember his heart pouring through those well chosen notes, and the warmth I felt inside as I listened to him play,' Herbie Hancock has written.

Just listen to this album or check out Strollin' on the Enja label, or Chet in Paris Volumes 1 and 2 on Barclay - Em Arcy, or Chet Baker Sings on the Riverside label. You will not be disappointed unless you think what might have been if he'd thrown the needle away and lived for that high he creates in his listener, the ultimate high of his trumpet and voice.

Get down and burn to the sheer power of the Spear

By WILLIAM JAMES
Collegian Staff

Get rid of the booze, the pets and the frisbees and hunt down a decent copy of a 5 college I.D. because Burning Spear are playing live at Eastside Sunday April 30th and those are the rules. Starting up with the Boston based band Miles at 12 noon, the concert also features Miracle Legion (see feature on page 11) and Los Angeles ska band The Untouchables (who appeared in the film Repo Man as well as on M.T.V.).

Burning Spear will be gracing an already smoking stage which will no doubt be scorched in flames by the presence of the master of reggae and the reggae band among reggae bands: Burning Spear and his remarkable nine piece band The Burning Band.

Winston Rodney, a.k.a. Burning Spear has a lot more on his mind than just making you dance, but his vocals combined with the rhythmic intensity of the band demand your movement, no matter how ridiculous you may look. Sitting or standing still is not an option. His shows have been described as inspirational, spiritually uplifting ,as being an almost religious experience. But at the same time these guys rock out or at least reggae out.

Still renowned as one of the great legendary reggae recordings (as it is) Burning Spear is responsible for Marcus Garvey titled after the name of the Rastafarian founder and the major inspiration (of course) of Rodneys' life and work.

Other credits include Man From the Hills, an album of a capella vocal chants, inspired in part by Burning Spears' disenchantment with the chaos of success that followed the popularity of Marcus Garvey; his solo performance in the cult film Rockers; and his first gigs in London in 1977 backed by Aswad.

Two of his albums, 1984's Resistance and 1986's People of the World, were nominated for Grammy's, proving that Burning Spear's anti oppresionist expression is done in a firmly polished style (the Grammy's appreciating nothing but a polished style).

Sponsored by the Commuter Area Government this show ,starting at noon on the Worcester D.C. field promises to be everything you ever wanted out of life ,or at lest out of education, I think. So throw those bone cows down, get off your asses and have some real fun; you'll know the difference.

GRADUATE EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATION
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

An Open Letter to Chancellor Joseph Duffey

April 24, 1989

Dear Chancellor Duffey,

This is to inform you that all day Monday and Tuesday, May 1 and 2, graduate-student teachers will be teaching their classes and discussion sections in the hallways and in the courtyard of the Whitmore Administration Building. Teachers and students are taking this action to remind you of the scope of the work graduate students perform for this University and of the University's need for graduate students. Without us, the University would not be able to provide the courses that undergraduates need for their degrees. Furthermore, we do not believe that levying curriculum or emergency fees on students is a fair solution to the problem of providing an adequate number of classes for undergraduates.

At no time will our Teach-out prevent workers and visitors in Whitmore from completing their tasks. Nor will our presence create a hazardous situation. We will not block hallways, doorways or elevators. We will not teach in stairwells. We intend to be in unarguable compliance with the picketing code. Members of the Graduate Employee Organization, or their delegated spokespersons, will be located in front of the main entrance of Whitmore across from Haigis Mall at all times during the demonstration. Please contact these people if you have any questions.

Hits Bangladesh

MANIKGANJ, Bangladesh (AP) — A tornado killed at least 500 people and devastated more than 20 villages in central Bangladesh, the government said yesterday.

The tornado Wednesday night blew away people, houses and animals as it whirled at 100 mph through the Manikganj area 25 miles northwest of Dhaka.

Survivors said the funnel cloud raged for 10 minutes and flattened "everything, including buildings."

"I saw black clouds gathering in the sky. In moments we found we were flying along with the house," said Sayeda Begum, a 30-year-old homemaker in Saturia village near Manikganj.

Another tornado hit the Narsingdi district, 25 miles east of the capital, killing five people and injuring 500, the English-language newspaper New Nation said.

The tornadoes followed a two-month drought that has threatened to destroy more than half the rice crop in this impoverished nation. The storms hit hours after President Hussain Muhammad Ershad ordered nationwide prayers for rain.

US official to conceal airline security alerts

LONDON (AP) — US Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said yesterday he will no longer tell Congress about airline security alerts for fear of leaks and is considering a bill to make unauthorized disclosure a crime.

Skinner also said the passengers on US airlines may be barred from taking electronic devices such as portable computers on aircraft following the Pan Am Flight 103 air disaster over Scotland.

Speaking to American reporters in London on the last leg of a five-nation European tour, Skinner said he was adamant about not discussing publicly intelligence-gathering or unannounced airline security bulletins.

"I have just sent a letter to the US Congress advising them that I will no longer disseminate information to them regarding security bulletins until I am absolutely sure that they have a mechanism in place to protect that information,"he said.

He said he plans new regulations about leaking airline "security-type information," adding: "I may seek legislation making it a crime."

Last month, Skinner criticized a London newspaper, The Daily Express, which reported a security bulletin sent by the US Federal Aviation Administration to airports and carriers March 16 about the possible hijacking of an American airliner in Europe.

Skinner said public disclosure of all warnings would mean they would be taken for granted.

After the Pan Am disaster, British Transport Secretary Paul Channon was accused by critics in Britain of bungling the dissemination to airlines of warnings from West Germany that Palestinian terrorists had devised a new radio cassette bomb.

Flight 103, bound for New York from Frankfurt via London, was blown apart by a tiny bomb hidden in a radio cassette recorder. It crashed on the Scottish village of Lockerbie, killing 270 people.

Skinner, who met Channon later today, also said he expects the latest US bomb-detection equipment, thermal neutron analysis, to be installed at several European airports by year's end. the machines can find plastic explosives missed by X-rays.

In a $60-million program, the United States accelerated development of thermal neutron analysis after the Flight 103 disaster Dec. 21. The first device is due to be installed at John F. Kennedy Airport, New York, in July.

"Every place I have gone, everyone wants to do more," said Skinner, who arrived in England after meeting government officials in Italy, West Germany, France and Switzerland.

On electronic devices, Skinner said that unless a sure means of examination is found "the ban of such devices is an option that will be looked at."

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a $100,000, three-alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. But we'll come out of it. The club will survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the club during the fire which started at the fire which started near the club's function room at 5 a.m. yesterday, leaving the shop and a section of the locker room standing, John J. Sheehy said.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You could feel torn between two masters. It may be time to jump off one bandwagon and onto another. A financial plum could drop into your lap. Seize a golden opportunity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A business transaction pans out putting you in a mood to celebrate. You learn more about the games some people play and are able to counter an opponent. Be a gracious winner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be prepared for any number of surprises today. Deal with an emotional issue before it hurts a close relationship. Better not put off important decisions until next week. Make up your mind now.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Others think you have painted yourself into a corner, but you know better. Follow your intuition and you will be a big winner. Trust your instincts in financial matter, too. Protect your savings.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Avoid a power struggle if you can. This is no time to antagonize people. Your deepest emotions are in play and you must be very careful when making decisions. Follow your conscience.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) Get-rich quick schemes will lead only to greater debt. The sure way to make money now is the old-fashioned way. Be careful not to make any impulsive moves at work.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22) A financial request will get a good hearing if you put all you cards and debts on the table. Eliminate some non-essentials from your life. Romance is a thing of beauty.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Last-minute opportunities could make this a day to remember. Once again you find it difficult to focus on work. Update your resume and look for a job you would really enjoy. Adventure beckons.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21) Not a good time for asking for a raise or promotion. Your day will come, however. Use a lull at work to catch up on details. Do some research before attending important meetings.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Listen to your partners and you will find a way to increase your income. More rest and better-balanced meals will give you greater stamina. Tensions ease. Tackle "top priority" projects first.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Sort out your feelings and a relationship will develop in a pleasing way. You may feel a need for more solitude. Plan a quiet weekend at home and meditate on the future.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Jealousy could rear its head tonight or tomorrow. Others will turn to you for help with spiritual questions. Trust a child to make the right decision about love. Your faith will be rewarded.

UMass bicycle racing teams remain no. 1 in the East

The University of Massachusetts bicycle racing club remained the top team on the East Coast after winning the Eastern Collegiate Cycling Federation championships, held in Amherst.

"It was our honor to host the championships and our duty to win," UMass club president Greg Swinard said.

The ECC is the largest conference in the nation with more than 70 schools participating. The competition was divided into three races, with four categories for each race: men's A varsity, men's B junior varsity, men's C novice and women's.

The scores in bicycle racing are base on points gained by individual team members which are added up to obtain an overall team score.

The first stage was a 10-mile loop road race with an eight-mile uphill climb. The three-lap men's A race was won by Peter Vollers. UMass had four top placers in the two-lap men's B race: Andy Graves, Sean Morrissey, Tim Stewart and David Pollack.

Patrick Brandon placed first in the one-lap men's C race and Kim Morris placed fourth in the one-lap women's race.

The second stage was a 15-mile team time trial. UMass took first in the men's A and B divisions, second in the men's Cs and fifth in the women's.

Swinard said, "One of the top reasons UMass is so successful is because we work well together as a team."

The final stage was a criterion race around Southwest Residential Area. The men's A race was won by Vollers. Vollers' led the 25-lap race right from the beginning, and said, "I was out there putting out a maximum effort while the rest of the team worked hard blocking for me in the pack."

All six of the men's A team finished in the top 15.

"We had a lot of chances," said Stone, "like when we left Seccafico on third in the first inning, we just didn't follow through."

UMass had better get into some more batting practice before the weekend because they face a very important test. Atlantic-10 rival Temple University will be visiting to play a pair of doubleheaders and in order for the Minutemen to entetain any hopes of post-season play they must take three of the four games from the Owls, who currently hold the second place spot in the conference. UMass would like to have a diffent landmark to talk about instead of the '20' in the loss column.

The Syracuse loss was the last of four losses to Top 15 teams for the 8-4 Knights. They've also fallen to Navy, Johns Hopkins and Towson State, but the 'Cuse game was the killer. Rutgers led 4-2 in the first quarter before the Orangemen went on a 17-1 roll that blew it open to 19-5 at the half. Ouch.

So they've been licking some deep wounds all week. And one can only guess what that will mean for them when they take to Boyden for tomorrow's game.

But rest assured the Gorillas will be ready. They played their best overall game of the year in beating Harard, 12-4 Wednesday. The defense was solid and the offense unleashed 59 shots to shake what had been a mild slump.

One thing that could play into the visitor's favor is its size. The Knights are a rugged crew, carrying several players in the 6-foot, 200-pound range. They like to use their size as well, playing a solid, physical game.

Andy DeCicco leads a high-scoring Rutgers cast with 29 goals and 22 assists. Pete Tortorella adds 24-20-44 numbers and Steve Luciano 15-29-44. All-American Greg Rinaldi leads in goals along with DeCicco with 29.

In the net is John Schmunk (not 'Schmuck', Hill faithful, but close enough — go nuts), yielding only 7.6 goals per game with a .633 save percentage.

According to UMass coach Dick Garber, this is an important game for his team as far as rankings for the postseason are concerned. A win may give the Gorillas enough stock to move up into the top five in the country.

■ women's lax

games though. It has taken them almost an entire season, but the attack and the defense have finally found themselves.

"We're playing so much stronger," UMass coach Patti Bossio said. "I wish we could start the season at this point. We're peaking."

Now is a good time to be peaking with Brown University waiting for the Gazelles down in Providence, R.I. (12 p.m. gametime tomorrow). Brown is the No. 10 team in the country right now and though the Bruins don't have a good shot at the NCAA playoffs (which fields the top six teams), a little personal satisfaction is on the line for the Ivy Leaguers.

The Bruins are 9-4 this season, 4-3 in the old Ivy League. A win tomorrow would tie a school record for most wins in a season for a Brown women's lax team.

"We're not really looking to the playoffs at this point," Brown coach Wendy Anderson said. "We are just looking forward to winning ten games which would tie a school record."

Anderson sounds pretty confident. That has been the case with a lot of teams that have played the Gazelles this season. They think its money in the bank. But as Rutgers found out last weekend, when UMass trounced them 13-5, it's not.

"We played well and I also think that we took Rutgers by a little bit of surprise," Bossio said. "Because everyone is underestimating us."

After the Gazelles play Brown on Saturday, they will have to bounce back and play Northwestern on Sunday.

"We have to do it for ourselves," Bossio said. "Now there is nothing. There is absolutely no kind of competition after this weekend so we just want to end on a good note."

■ softball

The Minutewomen are coming off a staggering stretch of 10 games in eight days. Though injuries to Jen Pugliese and Mary Duff teamed up with a cold and flu bug to thin an already bare bones roster, UMass is playing its best ball of the year streaking into the final third of the regular season.

"Everybody thinks I'm crying wolf... but the truth is we're hurting bucks. . . all I pray is that we get through this weekend," said Sortino.

She attributes the recent wins to a balanced diet of pitching, defense, hard hits and attitude. "They're together," she said, "they play tough. Everybody's pulling their own weight, it's not one or two kids carrying the team."

Indeed. Offensively, Duff, Chris Collins, Jen Miller, Barbara Meehan and Holly Aprile have all been flattening the ball of late. And in the field, the fact that no team in the last week-and-a-half has scored more than one earned run off the Minutewomen reflects tough team defense and spotless starting pitching efforts from Aprile and senior Chris Wanner.

"The pitchers are doing a great job," said Sortino, "and I think we've got a good defense. Mentally, with a few exceptions, we've been making the right plays.

"And (the hitting surge) comes from the fact that we're swinging at good pitches. We've done a lot of work, that was the focus of practice," she continued, adding that the experience gained over the season's haul is paying of in patient plate appearances as well.

All phases of the Minutewomen's game will be drawn on this weekend if their going to stretch the winning streak into the last two weeks of the season. Temple, as Sortino well knows, gives no ground at home, and the Minutewomen have played to a 9-11 record on the road this season.

"They're very, very tough to play in Philadelphia. They've got good hitting and defense, the whole nine yards. . . we're really going to have to play our best ball."

■ crew teams

as they are still looking for their first victory of the season.

Little is known about ULowell and Mercy Hurst. Lowell's crew is unpredictable; they are good one year and bad the next. Mercy Hurst is relatively new on the scene. "They recently pumped a lot of money into their program, so we don't know what to expect," said Trond. All races will be close, so anything can happen.

The races will take place Saturday morning in Williamstown, and will begin at 10:00 am.

Despite yesterday's warm weather, the Minutemen's bats were ice cold in their 4-3 loss.

Hartford slips past Minutemen, 4-3

UMass hitting woes continue; team manages just six hits

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Staff

Yesterday was a landmark day in the season of the University of Massachusetts baseball team. After losing to the Hartford University Hawks 4-3 at Lorden Field the struggling Minutemen got their 20th loss of the season to 16 wins.

UMass' hitting woes continued as they only managed six hits and batted in three runs.

"It's no secret," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "We didn't hit today. We haven't hit all year."

Hartford didn't do to much better, only collecting eight hits against an impressive performance by Jerry Creamer. However, they did benefit from a pair of errors by UMass second baseman Kevin Correa and some clutch hitting.

Both pitchers struggled early. In the top of the first, Creamer left the leadoff batter swinging at air but then gave up a single and a walk, leaving runners at second and third with two out after a fielder's choice. But Creamer got the next batter to roll it back to the mound to escape the inning.

His Hartford counterpart, Gary Gallagher, also squeezed out from behind the eight ball after seeing leadoff hitter Drew Seccafico take a walk, steal second and go to third on Steve Kern's grounder. But he was stranded after a struggling Drew Comeau (0-for-4 for the day) flied to center.

First blood was drawn by the Hawks in the top of the second. Leadoff batter Mike Scrapchansky walked and took second when Correa bobbled Greg Centracchio's grounder, leaving men on first and second with none away. It looked like the Minutemen might get out untouched when they doubled up Centracchio and Al Tolomeo, 5-4-3, Scrapchansky to third, but Joe Bellino ended those hopes after parking a Creamer pitch over the right field fence for two runs.

Hartford added another run in the 6th inning when Centracchio reached first on another Correa miscue and moved over on a bunt by Tolomeo. He continued on to third on a wild pitch by Creamer and came around on a single to right-center by Mike Desjardins, giving the Hawks a 3-0 lead after six.

The Minutemen ended Hartford hopes for a shutout in the 7th and looked as though they were making a bid to win the contest. Brian Bright led off with a single, which was followed with one by Lou Olivieri and Glen DiSarcina, loading the bases with no one out. Gallagher was removed after walking Tom Murray to score Bright. His replacement, Tony Franco, got Murray at second on a fielder's choice which allowed Olivieri to score. DiSarcina crossed the plate soon after on a long pop-up to first by Seccafico. That left the score tied at 3-3 going into the 8th inning.

The Hawks took the lead for quickly good though when Centracchio got a single to start the 8th. He went to second when UMass catcher Olivieri lost a pitch in the dirt and went to third on a single from Tolomeo. Bellino got his third RBI soon after, scoring Centracchio on a single to right. At this point, Stone gave Creamer the hook in favor of Brian Conroy, but the damage was done.

Conroy stifled Hartford for the rest of the way but the Minutemen could not muster up the offense to come back and the game ended with UMass one run down and another mark in the loss column.

Stone saw a lot of the problem in the game being the lack of timely hitting on the Minutemen's part.

Minutewomen gear up for Philly series

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

If this is what they can do when they are sick and tired. . . up against a rampaging flu bug, the University of Massachusetts softball team has won 10 straight games including Wednesday's 7-1, 7-1 poundings of the University of Rhode Island. Their season's record has swelled to 22-14, and in the Atlantic 10, UMass stands in second place with a 7-1 record.

After packing away 48 hours worth of rest and vitamin C, the Minutewomen will travel to Philadelphia this weekend to face St. Joeseph's for a pair on Saturday, and league-leading Temple for a second doubleheader on Sunday.

The Owls were 25-15 overall going into yesterday's game with Rider College and 9-1 in the A-10, while the Lady Hawks are locked in the league's basement having struggled to post totals of 7-24, 1-7. The four best records in the league will travel to the A-10 Championships at Rutgers May 12-14; this years' young UMass squad has optimistically been keeping that weekend free.

"All I pray is that we get through this weekend," said coach Elaine Sortino. "It (two day's off following URI) was welcome rest, we're banged up, sore and sick."

UMass crew in Valley Girl race tomorrow

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts crew teams will close out the regular season tomorrow, by participating in a five crew race against: Williams College, the University of Lowell, Tufts University, and Mercy Hurst from Pennsylvania.

The varsity women are striving for an undefeated season. They have been strong all year, and are hoping it will carry over into tomorrow's race. The Williams College crew should be the only team to pose a threat. "I believe our women will win Saturday, but it will be a tough race," said UMass coach Dave Trond.

UMass has another undefeated squad, the men's lightweight-eight. Their prime foe will be the boat from Tufts University. The lightweights are coming off a strong victory over the Coast Guard Academy, and are expecting to win tomorrow. "This race will not be easy, and should indicate how well we'll do in the New Englands," said Trond.

Lax teams: the host of the party

Looking back, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team can be a little weary of what happened last weekend in the Carrier Dome in Syracuse.

The Gorillas match-up with Rutgers at the Hill tomorrow.

What transpired was a total shellacking by the Syracuse University Orangeman of Rutgers University. Not only is Syracuse on the horizon for the Gorillas, but the Scarlet Knights, whiplash victims of a 27-15 pasting, haven't been on the field since that dismal day.

Therefore Rutgers could be a little angry when it comes to the Hill tomorrow for a 1 p.m. contest with UMass. Given the fact that UMass and Rutgers are usually good for a tight battle anyway, tomorrow's game should be a beaut.

After the season that the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has had, you'd think that the Gazelles would be happy to pack it in after this weekend.

At 2-9, it has not been a very fun season for the young UMass squad. The season will mercifully come to an end on Sunday when the Gazelles host Northwestern University (1 p.m., Totman Field).

Also in action this weekend will be the UMass men's tennis team, and the men and women's track teams.

The Minutemen, 3-3 on the year, will be at the University of Connecticut for the New England Championships on both Saturday and Sunday.

The track teams however, will be competing in the Penn Relays. The Minutewomen will be in their final day of competition today, while the men will be racing both today and tomorrow.

Again, also in action . . . is the UMass rugby team. The Minutemen will be hosting Brown University tomorrow.

Wreckage surrounds one of the two Brandywine apartments gutted in an early morning fire yesterday.

Brandywine blaze ruins two apartments

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

An early morning fire yesterday gutted two apartments in the number 10 building at the Brandywine apartment complex and caused smoke damage in six others, an Amherst fire department spokesman said.

No injuries to residents or firefighters were reported, he said.

The blaze apparently started in the ground floor apartment and spread to the one above, but the exact cause of the fire is still under investigation by state and local authorities, he said.

The Amherst Fire Department started receiving calls alerting them to the blaze at 2:36 a.m. and dispatched two pumper trucks and a ladder truck from North Station, located near Tilson Farm, at 2:39 a.m.

Additional vehicles were dispatched from Central Station in downtown Amherst shortly after, including two more pumper trucks and three support vehicles, the spokesman said.

When the firefighters arrived at the scene at 2:44 a.m. they "observed fire involving two apartments, one on the first floor and the one above," the spokesman said.

Residents of the building could not be reached for comment on the fire.

Residents living near the building said they were awakened by people banging on their doors and screaming about the fire.

When they went out to see what was happening, flames were shooting out of the rear of the building.

Charges linger over Republicans

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Criminal charges may be brought against four members of the Republican Club later this week, stemming from the March 6 confrontation between publishers of The Liberator and members of the club.

At a showcause hearing Friday, Second Clerk Magistrate of Northampton District Court Mrs. Keller said she would give her decision Friday after thoroughly reviewing and researching the evidence.

Keller can dismiss the case, continue the case or file criminal charges against the Republicans.

Ted Chambers and Robb Smith filed charges of assault, assault and battery, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and a civil rights violation against Alan Brynjolfsson, Doug Dratch, Brian Darling and W. Greg Rothman in Northampton District Court on March 6.

Both parties said they were inclined to think that the clerk would continue the case for six months.

"If the court doesn't deal with it, the university did, and that was appropriate," Chambers said.

"Based on Mrs. Keller's comments, I think she will postpone any decision until the end of the school year," said Les Black, attorney for the Republicans.

"It may hurt my clients to have criminal charges filed against them," he said. "My clients are very much a part of a two-party system."

Chambers and Smith have a lawyer, but did not bring representation to the hearing. "We didn't think we needed one, I don't know if it would have done us any good," Chambers said.

The Judicial Board at UMass already heard the case and found Rothman, Dratch and Brynjolfsson guilty, according to Rothman. In the early hours of March 6, Smith and Chambers reported they were confronted by members of the Republican Club after 2 a.m. outside Van Meter Residence Hall. They said they were about to leave their car to drop off copies of The Liberator when a car pulled up beside them.

Last 9 protesters arraigned Friday in Northampton

NORTHAMPTON — The last nine people who were arrested last week after the occupation of Memorial Hall were arraigned Friday in Northampton District Court. A pre-trial conference was scheduled for October by Judge Alvertus Morse.

Sixty-one people were arrested at the University of Massachusetts last Tuesday after a two-day occupation of Memorial Hall protesting military-funded research at UMass.

A rally against the research is scheduled for Wednesday outside the Student Union, according to Jonathon Leavitt, one of the protesters. He said Mel King of the Boston Rainbow Coalition is expected to speak at the rally.

The protesters have held several meetings since the arrests to organize themselves and plan the next course

Conditions ideal for sunsplashed Eastside concert

By JOHN SWANSON

Everything fell into place. Marshall amplifiers towered above a sea of bobbing scalps. Bubbles, hacky sacks and occasional wisps of ganja smoke filled the space between about 2,000 partly clad bodies.

What turned out to be a cloudless, 70-degree day proved an ideal setting for the University of Massachusetts Eastside Concert '89. The show consisted of performances by Jamaican reggae artist Burning Spear, Los Angeles' hip Untouchables, New Haven's Miracle Legion and Boston's Miles Dethmuffen.

The grassy hill near Worcester Dining Commons was surrounded by plastic fencing. Thousands of feet of the orange barrier were broken only by small entrances where security volunteers checked for frisbees, alcohol and recording devices. Vendors of overpriced concessions catered to sweaty consumers in the parking lot near North Pleasant Street.

The emergency medical technician said he had distributed one Band-Aid in the course of the day. Police officers said the crowd was "peaceful" and reported no arrests. In short, it was the kind of concert promoters dream about.

Cutback City floundering

Protesters adamant despite threat to dismantle

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

About 30 students gathered at "Cutback City" Friday afternoon, protesting the proposed dismantling of the three-month-old shanty-town, and calling for a change in the general trend of increasing military-funded research on campus.

Chanting, "organize and mobilize save Cutback City," the protestors expressed their concern with a proposal by student senators W. Greg Rothman, Brian Darling, Steve Lutz and Doug Dratch to relocate the 11 ramshackle huts and shacks.

"The student senate plans to tear down Cutback City, and we're here to show our support for the people in Cutback City, and join them in fighting the budget cuts," said MaryAnne Antonellis, a member of Students For a Socially Responsible University.

The budget cuts will reduce the incoming freshman class by seven to 15 percent, Antonellis said.

The freedom of education at UMass is also in jeopardy, Antonellis said. The general trend has been toward the physical sciences and engineering, while funding for languages and the arts has decreased. The military funds research in the science and engineering departments, and students studying languages and arts get left out, she said.

"The ramshackle condition of these huts is symbolic of the ramshackle state of public higher education in this state," said John U. Davis, a protestor. "It's also important that people realize that there's a coherent link between cuts in the past eight years, and human needs across the United States, of which education is one, and the drastic increase in military funding and military research . . . and that's what we're all about."

■ bulimic student overcomes problem

For four months, Sara said she followed a strict diet and lost the weight she had gained. She dropped to 125 pounds, a healthy weight for a woman with her 5-foot-6 frame.

"But I wanted to lose five or 10 more pounds," she said. "I just was never satisfied. I've always been on a diet."

But unhappy depriving herself of foods she liked, Sara said a friend told her she could eat whatever she wanted if she threw it up afterward.

"If you have such an intense desire to be thin," Sara said, "you will do it at any cost."

When Sara stopped losing weight even as she continued to eat and purge, she began to exercise excessively. "In one day I would go to classes in the morning, teach aerobics, run across campus to a karate class, jog four or five miles, and then waitress at night, eat my one meal of the day and throw it up."

She said she was able to hide her behavior from her friends by only getting sick late at night, at home or at work.

She reached her lowest point one night when she could not concentrate on studying for an exam because all she could think about was food.

Her recovery took more than a year, she said. "Recovery takes a long, long time, because you have to reevaluate why you think you have to lose weight," she said.

"Something would happen that would upset me and I would eat a lot and get sick," she added. "Then I could worry about my bulimia and not about whatever problem was bothering me in the first place."

Today, Sara said, there are days when she wants to get sick, but added that she has been free of the eating and purging cycle for six months.

"I do believe you can get 100 percent recovered, but you need to give it time," she said.

The one part of her recovery she has yet to reach, she said, is throwing out her bathroom scale.

"Having a scale kind of goes against the trust I have with my own body," she said. "If I trust myself with food, I don't need numbers to reinforce that trust."

Sara paused and said she will throw it away "within the next month."

A few minutes later she said quietly, "I'm throwing it away tonight. It's gone. I'm getting rid of it."

of action. They have not yet decided their next move, but they said protesting would continue until their demands, one of which is an end to Defense Department research at UMass, are met by the university.

"One hundred and fifty people have been at the meetings," said Randy Viscio, a Hampshire College protester. "The next time arrests are made, I can see 100 people getting arrested." The seven people arrested two weeks ago following the occupation of a microwave laboratory in Marcus Hall were notified by the Dean of Students that they were to schedule preliminary hearings by last Friday, according to Jeanne Hopkins.

"The first of the seven is scheduled for Monday at 1:30 p.m.'" said Andy Sirulnik, one of the seven. "We are all going to the meeting with our lawyer [Cristobal Bonifaz]. Because they [the dean of students office] refused to let us meet together, as a group," he said.

Smith and Chambers said Brian Darling, Doug Dratch, Steve Lutz and Alan Brynjolfsson got out of their car and started banging on the hood of Smith and Chamber's vehicle.

A chase ensued and ended at the Amherst police station, where the Republicans allegedly continued to harass publishers of The Liberator.

"I think it's very unfortunate that campus politics end up in court," Black said. "They couldn't beat us in the elections, on the Senate floor or in public opinion, so they are attempting to do it in court," Rothman said.

The legal battle between the Republicans and the Spartacus League, a Cambridge based Trotskyist organization, ended Friday when the both parties dropped all charges in Northampton District Court.

The charges and counter charges, were brought after the February 9 confrontation between the Spartacist League and members of the Republican Club at a meeting of the Spartacist League.

■ TA's to protest

While tuition and fees at the University are rising, Rothberg said "the quality of live and the capacity to educate has gone down."

"TAs have not been able to speak for themselves about what kinds of planning the University needs to survive," he said. "[The administration's] solutions have taken their toll on those people who could least afford it."

The demonstration is sponsored by the Graduate Employees Organization, the GSS, and the Student Government Association.

■ Brandywine fire

Amherst fire officials said that the smoke alarm system of the number 10 building alerted residents to the fire, who then evacuated.

While the Amherst fire department was involved with the two-hour blaze, the Hadley fire department stayed on alert taking Amherst calls, the spokesman said.

"If people can go back to number 10, I don't know. That's for the Brandywine people to decide," he said.

Whether or not residents will be able to return to their apartments today is unclear, the spokesman said.

TAs to protest UMass economy

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Graduate student teaching assistants are planning to activate the first stage of a two-day protest against economic turmoil on campus today by holding classes inside Whitmore Administration Building or outside Haigis Mall.

More than 100 classes are expected to participate in the "teach out," which will be held today and tomorrow during scheduled class times.

Gita Van Heerdan, president of the Graduate Student Senate, and a former teaching assistant in the Philosophy department, said the demonstrators will focus on state budget cutbacks, tuition and fee hikes, and TA layoffs and pay cuts.

"We do an awful lot of the teaching down here," Van Heerdan said. "If we aren't paid more, we're simply going to go elsewhere."

The average salary for teaching assistants at the University of Massachusetts is less than $6,500 a year, one of the lowest stipend rates in the northeast, she said.

"They simply aren't competitive rates, which means the University is going to have much more difficulty attracting good students," Van Heerdan said. "The amount we're given simply isn't enough to live on."

Seth Rothberg, an organizer of the event and a teaching assistant in the English department, said 260 discussion classes, which are taught by TAs to supplement professors' lectures, are scheduled to be cut for next semester.

"Discussion sessions are the livelihood of TAs and the way undergraduates get an education," Rothberg said.

Rothberg said several TAs are working to form a union on campus to acquire some position of power against further cutbacks in salary and positions.

"TAs make much more where they are part of a bargaining unit," he said. "The better organized [TAs] are, the better off they will be."

The remains lie scattered of a 10-foot tall tepee which burned down over the weekend in Cutback City, cutting the numbers of structures in the city from 12 to 11. Mears also said there were several safety violations at the city, including non-fire retardant paint and a lack of smoke alarms and fire extinguishers.

Victim helps others with eating disorders

By SHARON WILKEY

Sixth in a 10-part series on life at the University of Massachusetts

A pseudonym has been used in this story to protect a student's identity

A University of Massachusetts student who said she wasted two years of her life being controlled by an eating disorder is now turning her anger and sadness into positive energy by aiding others who suffer.

"I can relate," she said, "because I've been there."

Sara said two years ago she began to vomit most of the food she consumed because she wanted to lose weight.

"I knew that getting sick all the time was wrong," she said. "But I thought I was in control."

Throwing up once a week grew into three times a day, and the cycle of eating and purging began to take over Sara'a life, she said.

But food, she said, is only the symptom of the disorder, not the problem itself. "You're stuffing down so many feelings that you want to express and you can't," she said. "It all gets so confused."

She said, "I can't believe now how I was falling so deep, diving, and I couldn't get out."

With the help of a University of Massachusetts nutritionist, Sara, 21, said she was able to begin the climb to recovery. "I cried and I couldn't believe I was finally telling someone," she recalled.

Her past despair enables her to understand the pain of other victims of eating disorders. Sara leads a confidential self-help group for bulimic students on Monday nights in the Campus Center.

"Every woman should know that she doesn't have to be thin to be well liked, respected, or successful," she said.

She said the 10 women in the group help her as much as she helps them, because part of her own recovery is being able to talk about her bulimia.

"It's such a secret disease," Sara said. "You think you're the only one and you're not."

According to University nutritionist Arlene Thomson, an estimated 11 to 20 percent of college-age women are victims of bulimia. At UMass, that could mean as many as 2,000 women who go through the same daily ritual Sara endured for two years.

Sara tells those in her group that, like her, they must learn to accept responsibility for their actions. "Even if someone's throwing up once a month, they've got a problem, and they can't deny it because it's going to get worse," she said.

> "Every woman should know that she doesn't have to be thin to be well-liked, respected or successful."
> – Sara

She also tells them help is available at UMass, but what works for one person may not work for another.

"For each individual, anything that makes that person recover is the best thing," she said. "For me, the thing that helped the most was education, reading and studying about the disease."

Last year, Sara changed her major from physical education to "Women's Health Issues," a major she created through the bachelor's degree with an individual concentration (BDIC) program. Her self-help sessions are part of an independent study.

Focusing on eating disorders for her major, she said, she also took classes such as "Women's Magazines" and "The Psychology of Women" to learn the ways society pressures women to be thin.

Sara said after receiving her diploma, she hopes to attend graduate school, and perhaps become a counselor for women with eating disorders.

She said when she arrived at UMass, the size of the school overwhelmed her and she turned to food to relieve her stress. "I not only gained the freshman 15," she said, "I gained the freshman 20 or 25."

Second series of racial notes passed at Smith College

By LAURA KLIVANS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Four Black women at Smith College received racially harassing notes last week, the second time this semester that discriminatory notes were passed at the college.

The notes were delivered to South African student Siphokazi Koyana, Kenyan student Wanbui Mwangi, and African-American students Jennifer Knight and Shannon Snead, all residents of Chapin House at the college. The notes came in one envelope but were individualized for each of the students, according to Diane Rowe, president of the house.

School President Mary Maples Dunn has called an all-campus meeting for today at 1 p.m. to discuss the incident. The meeting effectively closes the campus, as classes are cancelled.

Last Thursday, some 600 Black students, many wearing black clothing, reacted to news of the notes by marching from the house to College Hall, the school's administration building. The students spoke with Dunn, presenting to her a "statement of solidarity," Rowe said.

Dukakis aide to be investigated

BOSTON, (AP) — Top Dukakis administration aides Paul Pezzella has stepped down on an unpaid leave while a federal grand jury investigates whether he profited after helping a Worcester developer win approval for a $106 million project.

Pezzella, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' director of personnel, acknowledged lobbying on behalf of the Worcester developer but said he was not paid for his efforts and would be exonerated.

"I have done nothing wrong and I am certain the investigation reported by the news media will completely exonerate me," Pezzella said in a statement released by his attorney, Max Stern.

Pezzella and all five members of the Worcester Redevelopment Authority have been subpoenaed to appear before a US District court grand jury next week. Prosecutors are expected to ask Pezzella whether he lobbied the WRA on behalf of developer Angelo Scola, selected over two other bidders to build a 30-story office tower across from the Worcester Centrum.

Holyoke — home of first legal pad

HOLYOKE, (AP) — About a century ago, according to legend, a judge asked a local paper company to come up with a lined pad with a margin on the left where he could jot down notes. With that the legal pad, and a multi-million dollar business, was born in this Connecticut river mill city;

The plant, now one of three making legal pads for the Ampad Co., is still churning them out, at a rate of about 5000,000 a week, according to Michael Ginley, production manager.

His Honor's moniker and the exact date has been lost and versions of the story vary as to whether he was a Holyoke jurist or penned a letter from his Baltimore, Md., home.

"But he was a judge and that's where the term legal pad came from," said Peter Bishop, divisional production manager for Ampad, which is still the nation's largest producer of notepads. "If he had been a train engineer, it probably would have been called the 'engineer's pad.'"

By conventions, a legal pad has a ruled margin either 1 or 14 inch from the left edge, Bishop said. It can be lined or unlined, pasted, perforated or sewn and it does not need to be canary yellow. The very first were white.

"No one really knows why canary yellow," Bishop said. "It may be that yellow, like green, is easier on the eyes. Or it maybe just that it was what was available at the time."

Recently Ampad has blossomed forth with legal pads in eight colors, including "orchid" and "dusty rose."

But if the prospect of a lady lawyer armed with a lavender legal pad has a chilling effect, take comfort. The nation's top female attorney, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, still scribbles on traditional yellow in the 14-inch length.

So does President Bush and a host of lesser bureaucrats. In fact, the federal government get its legal pads by the tractor-trailer load.

"It's precedent," said Judge Nancy Dusek-Gomes, who was sitting temporarily in Holyoke District Court. "There are some days I'd like to wear a lavender robe and write in a lavender legal pad. But you won't ever see it. For some reason, no one really knows why, we always wear black robes and write on yellow legal pads in black ink."

Although the federal courts, faced with having to provide file cabinets in various sizes- a side industry spawned by the legal pad-standarized legal papers at the 8½ by 11-inch size in 1982, the Supreme Court still orders legal pads in both large, medium and small sizes for the justices, according to court spokeswoman Toni House.

The differing sizes stemmed in part from regional preference, said retired Ampad executive Henry A. Fifield. Attorneys in New England and New York took to the pasted 11-inch size, he said, while those in the Midwest and West preferred the perforated 14-inch size. And Philadelphia lawyers, for reasons that are not quite clear, stuck for years to an 8-by-12 1/2-inch legal pad.

"What has the legal pad meant to me," pondered noted defense attorney William Kunstler, who goes through about 20 yellow 11-inch pads weekly.

"It provides ample room to doodle during boring moments in the courtroom," he said. "An when you stride up to a witness snapping though the pages, stop, look the witness dead in the eye and say 'Didn't you testify.'"

"But unfortunately not even the largest are quite large enough to wrap even a medium-sized founder," Kunstler said. "So I have to fall back on the local newspaper."

Exxon curbs overtime to justify smaller crews

BOSTON (AP) — Exxon Shipping Co. has been privately instructing its captains and ship engineers to eliminate overtime for unlicensed engine room workers so it can show the Coast Guard that reductions among those workers are justified, according to a published report.

Exxon plans to reduce the size of engine room crews in order to cut the costs of operating the company's fleet of 19 oceangoing ships, the Boston Sunday Globe reported, based on Exxon memos it obtained.

Manpower cuts on huge ships like the Valdez have been widely criticized by both shipping unions and ship captains as endangering ship safety and operating procedures. The Coast Guard and the company say the cuts do not jeopardize safety.

In a memo last year from S. W. McRobbie, Exxon fleet co-ordinator, Exxon captains and engineers were instructed to reduce "unlicensed engine room overtime to zero... in order to establish the type of vessel overtime patterns which will deomonstrate to the Coast Guard that the vessel can be safely operated without" unlicensed workers.

The Exxon seamen's union say elimination of overtime is not feasible and cites cases where engine room workers have worked up to 100 hours overtime in a 15-day period.

Despite union complaints that the crew levels on Exxon's ships, especially automated diesel ships like the Exxon Valdez, are unsafe, Exxon vessels have continued to obtain Coast Guard certificates allowing reduced crews, the union says.

The certificates permit crews to be cut to 15, including officers. Before the reductions, most ships carried crews of between 20 and 25.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University administration.

Have hope — don't freeze

I clipped these statistics from Parade magazine in January of 1988. They've been tacked up on my bedroom wall ever since.

* Cans of soda that Pepsi must sell to recoup the cost of its Michael Jackson advertising campaign: 192,307,692
* Number of Americans currently frozen in the hope of one day coming back to life: 13
* Percentage of Americans who think the afterlife will be boring: 5

All three of these stats are related. By the time he's 40, Michael Jackson most likely will freeze himself to prevent his old age. And anyone who freezes him or herself in the hope of coming back to life once medical technology conquers death must think the afterlife will be pretty boring. But what about us normal folk who might drink Pepsi, but certainly can't afford to be part of some frozen experiment in a cryogenic lab? Do we have any hope?

A recent Newsweek poll recorded that 94 percent of Americans believe in God. Of that 94 percent, 77 percent believe that there is a heaven and 76 percent of those persons think they have a good or excellent chance of making it there.

If three quarters of the population thinks it's going to heaven, I figure that makes Americans either optimistic or egotistical. Whatever happened to divine justice and the idea of the saved living in paradise while the unsaved roast in eternal hell fire? Fifty-eight percent of Americans believe there is a hell, but only 6 percent think they have a good chance of going there. Gone are the days of stout and stern preachers instilling the fear of eternal damnation into the body of believers.

In mainstream Christianity at least, the burner has been turned down to a low simmer. The Roman Catholic Church still officially preaches the possibility of everlasting damnation, but during the 60's, Vatican Council II produced hundreds of pages of documents and hell was never mentioned. Conservative evangelicals who, in part, preach that there is no purgatory, even for those who have never heard the Gospel and have had no opportunity to accept Christ as their personal Lord and Savior. They are also beginning to have trouble swallowing the notion of hell. In one study, evangelical theology students were asked if they thought Gandhi was in hell. The question made them "extremely nervous," and now, more and more evangelicals are speaking of hell as a "soul-sleep," rather than an agonizing punishment.

If the concept of hell is slowly disappearing, we have to wonder how long it will take for heaven to disappear along with it. Rabbi Terry Bard of Boston sums up what he believes to be the predominant Jewish stance on the issue: "Dead is dead." Period.

Newsweek's poll also indicated that 24 percent of America believes in reincarnation. Lama Wang Chen of Rime Dakshang Tagyu, a Tibetan Buddhist organization in Los Angeles, teaches that after death we are in a state of suspended consciousness for three days. Then, after a period of 49 more days in which we wander the universe as spirits, the unenlightened souls are reincarnated as animals or slaves. However, the enlightened, or Bodhisattva, may return to life as teachers, artists, or anything else they desire.

The afterlife, Pepsi, and Michael Jackson—issues that we have to deal with every day. But the only people who appear to have no doubts what the hereafter has in store for us are the most conservative fundamentalists. Here's what one Southern Baptist from Atlanta believes heaven will be like: "Everyone has met the standards of God's entrance requirements, which means that we all should be very much alike." If that's the case, then maybe that 5 percent who think the afterlife will be boring have a point.

If you have class, why not use it?

Cozy classes are the best. You know, the ones with a comfortable number of classmates (35 is good) in which to have informative, intellectual discussions — ones where the teacher promotes interesting, controlled discussion, and doesn't take attendance.

Alise Harfield

One of my English classes is cozy. About 35 or so students faithfully attend every Tuesday-Thursday from 9:30 until 11:00 a.m. We read great novels, and have ample opportunity to speak our opinions. If you're a liberal arts major you know that such an opportunity is hard to find lately.

But the strangest thing happened a few weeks ago during our first midterm. The class was invaded by ghosts! — at least 30 of them, pencils poised, ready to fill bluebooks, creating a near-standing room only situation. Was I in the wrong room? I thought I'd never seen these people before, 30 more of them. I'm hardly a math major, but it seems to me the population of the class doubled for the occasion of the test.

Strangely enough, the teacher was prepared for the invasion. She'd brought enough bluebooks for all 60, and hardly seemed surprised at all.

Then I flashbacked to February, the first class: I'd arrived late, having spent the first waking hours of the morning in an Add-Drop line for another English class. I walked in, the seats were all full, so I sat on top of the radiator where my rear burned for an entire hour and fifteen minutes. I looked at all 60 faces present. Half stared at their syllabus with a "will I be able to finish nine novels? look, (they were the lucky ones, already "in"), another dozen stared helplessly at the teacher wearing a I hope she signs my add form before theirs look, another dozen looked nervously around, trying to count how many HAD the class, still others found comic relief from looking at my face, that was trying to stifle an "My butt it burning, give me a chair" expression. These latter groups were the UNlucky ones, not yet "in."

It wasn't hard to figure out that these phantom students had skipped important lectures, avoided discussions of the novels, then conjured enough nerve to show what they'd "learned" by taking a midterm.

The mentioned class fills an upper-level requirement for English majors. Those who got into the class are darn lucky, given budget cuts. Those who did not are suffering, probably with a smaller credit load, or in a class that they despise but had to take just for the credit of it, so they'd perhaps graduate on time.

Of course it is tempting to "blow off" a class where the teacher does not take attendance, where you don't have to worry about your grade being adversely affected if you sleep late a dozen times. I admit to missing this very class on occasion. (Not the entire semester, but a few, yes.) This may come as a surprise to the phantoms, but missing the class does impede your performance overall. You really are missing a lot — what the teacher has to say on the subject matter, for instance. What your peers have to say. Heck, you probably don't even know what the heck you think about the material.

What can you learn by showing up 3 times — once for syllabus accumulation, once for a midterm, once for a final? Why sign up and pray and PAY for classes at all? Why go to college at all?

I used to think teachers who took attendance regularly and after 3 absences took away from final grades treated us as if we were still in high school.

Too bad we aren't — we could stay home every day, not waste money, and those who wanted to learn would have the chance to do so.

Empress' new clothes are dangerous

Andrea Dworkin was introduced a half hour late to an extremely large crowd at Smith College as being one of the "foremost feminist thinkers of our time." If this is true, and audience response proved it might be, then feminism couldn't be in worse hands.

William James

We were told "to respect Andrea's personal space" and also that we were "very lucky" to be seeing her for free; that if this event were not being sponsored by a number of women's resource centers (as well as by such luminaries as Smith College president Mary Maples Dunn) we would all have to pay $10.00 to hear Dworkin. This was said in context of Dworkin's supreme importance, but also raised an important question regarding her motivation.

Early on, Dworkin stated that "Pornography is about rape . . . not sex." She later said "Pornography is nothing more than money and pleasure." Not only is this an almost sickening contradiction, but the latter statement is also parallel to a widely held view of Dworkin, that she is, quite simply, in it for the money. Through redundant rhetoric calling itself radical thought, she touches on an extremely sensitive spot in human consciousness in order to fill her coffers.

Dworkin's argument on pornography is by no means mainstream. She expressed outright contempt for women with masochistic tendencies, saying "this is not normal and we suspect she doesn't want to be there." On this point as with several others, she drew on the example of "women dangling from meathooks" saying "we need to cut her down."

A line that received a great deal of applause was "women are safer on the street for 24 hours . . . don't go home if you live with a man." Seething with unconditional hatred for half the world's population, (the male half), she then told us that all men feel hostile towards women, including "you men in the audience."

"The defense of pornography is declaring war on the powerless." Who is actively initiating this war? What about all the women involved in the business side of pornography? What about Christine Hefner? What about Yellow Silk magazine? What about women who watch pornographic video tapes? A recent survey by Adult Video News cited that 33 percent of adult video renters and buyers are male/female couples, eight percent are women with other women, 21 percent are women alone. Then there's the piece of hard-core pornography, "Ice and Fire." Is this OK because she is "one of the foremost feminist thinkers of our time?" What is pornography? Does the Venus de Milo count? Just who is qualified to judge?

"Pornography doesn't bother me, the pornography of reality is what's terrifying. It's more obscene than any sexually explicit periodical or film I've ever encountered. Look at the incredible poverty in this country. Look at the pollution, air quality, the money situation and who has it," said Lydia Lunch, the actress, singer and poet, who is a human being first and a woman second.

A world without pornography would be a world more heavily censored than today's. If pornography is declared illegal, then with a shift in power, feminism could be declared illegal. We live in an age whose only appropriate description is "f—ked up". But to look for scapegoats for our anger and hatred causes nothing but more anger and hatred with people like Dworkin jumping in the centuries old bandwagons. And while Sandy Goddman awaits a possible five years imprisonment for expressing her feelings (by pouring glue on pornography at the Amherst Newsroom), Dworkin continues to make money for expressing her views, just as Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione does.

The empress' new clothes are more than just ridiculous, they are downright dangerous. Read, listen to and watch some Lydia Lunch instead.

Bring problems to the teacher

While I applaud the message of Minu Sebastian's recent editorial ("Taking action will help make the grade," April 27), and appreciate the recognition offered me by her piece, I must clarify a couple facts.

First, I am an assistant director, rather than the Director of the Writing Program. Charles Moran is, has been, and will continue to be the director. Second, the change in Sebastian's grade came about not through re-evaluation of her papers, but through recomputation of the grades already assigned by her instructor.

In short, I determined an error in arithmetic. As Grievance Officer of the Writing Program, one of my responsibilities is to adjudicate difficulties between instructors and students including grade disputes.

But a simple re-evaluation of papers previously graded by instructors is not a method I use to come to a happy resolution of the problem.

I urge students with questions about the grading policies to address those questions to their teachers — that is where I would first direct them. That is also where students are most likely to find satisfactory answers to their grade inquiries.

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli, of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a $100,000, three-alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"It's a disappointment," he said. "The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. But we'll come out of it. The club will survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the clubhouse during the fire which started near the club's function room at 4 a.m. yesterday, leaving only the shop and a section of the locker room standing, said John J. Sheehy said.

dozen spectators under an overcast sky. The four-piece act from the Boston club circuit doled out easy-tempo rock and roll through tastefully distorted guitars. "Mike Foley's All-Night Party" was among the day's more notable musical ventures.

By the time Miracle Legion hit the stage, the clouds had broken and the crowd had reached about 1,000. Entrance security weren't even asking for Five-College IDs at this point. The five-year-old Connecticut band's sweet resonance drew only quiet applause, but did manage to draw some dancing. The four musicians opened with a moving version of "All For The Best" and moved into a set which included cuts from their latest LP, Me and Mr. Ray.

The Untouchables drew a legitimate throng to the foot of the stage. Their latest album, Agent Double-O Soul, moved the band from an exclusively ska format to a more eclectic mixture of funk, rap, reggae and TV crime-drama themes. Their set ended with a rousing version of the Monkees' "I'm Not Your Stepping Stone."

Burning Spear played a soulful set of reggae tunes from his albums Marcus Garvey, Resistance and Man From The Hills. Spear — born Winston Rodney — was accompanied by his seven-piece Burning Band

As the sun descended over Goessmann Laboratory and the crowd began to thin, students responding once more to the late April call of exams and papers, abandoned the hill, exposing an assortment of litter and other debris. Astoundingly, the daffodils planted on the hill by the Greek Area survived.

The concert was sponsored by the Central, Northeast, Orchard Hill, Sylvan and Commuter area governments. Miracle Legion's Mark Mulcahy smiled at a less-than-receptive crowd.

"Did I hear someone say we were less than good?" he asked. "Isn't it nice, though? Isn't it nice to be outside?"

Hasten Jason, what does it take to buy a one way ticket?
— Lucas, Northampton

Another broad querie. The more leeway the better. My mind wanders. My parents thought I was mildly retarded. I sat in the yard unmoving for hours. The professionals gave me a clean slate; said I had an active imagination but was too young to utilize it. I found the key though, and now I stare into this goddamn self contained radiation tube writing for my life. With reasonable accuracy one could guess our friend Lucas to be a young, casual to serious drug user who just wants to skirt the truth; take off, Kerouac style, into the expanses of this great land. I would also assume that he is not of legal drinking age for if he was, chances are, he'd not feel the need to move around too much.

When Kerouac discovered he had a chronic illness he got on the horn with his agent at Greyhound, cancelled all travel plans, switched from reefers to hard liquor, and became determined to drink his way into the grave. Booze is non discriminant. Anywhere, anytime. Drink enough and you won't have to travel because the visions will come through, fine and clear. I was on the bus the other day talking with one of the conservative alliance's finest. His bad political disposition was overshadowed for the moment by his fiery eyes. He was attending the Kennedy lecture and had a full night of heckling to look foward to. He was all hopped up. We had a brief conversation about our vices. He talked of his longtime friend, the bottle, and I spoke of my two or three favorite non addictive narcotics. we came to the conclusion that the main difference between liberals and conservatives might not be as heated an issue as everybody thinks. We broke it down to raw physiology, basic wants and desires. The difference, as we discussed, could be as simple as this: Conservatives lean on alcohol while liberals like to dabble in the mysterious dark world of drugs.

Now, the implications of this hypothesis are considerable if we are to shed light on Lucas' question. Status quo is the crux of the republican dialectic. These boring freaks can be found in dark corners of every bar around, mouthing off while dribbling flat Bud draft onto the best flannel shirts and blue suits in town. Of course, I'm generalizing but it seems that these folks don't have to travel too far to uncover the prevailing opinion. I'm not saying they're right or wrong but idiots are a dime a dozen while you have to travel far and wide to uncover genius in this world. So good ole freeminded Kerouac hit the open road in search of good hearts, big brains, poppin' jazz, and the best dope around. Oh yeah, Jack was into the womens too. He talked a good game but if interpretting poetry on a bus bound for the coast could get him laid by some cute lil farmhand then to hell with knowledge.

Which brings me to another piece of the puzzle. Are these road trips just a rotted out vehicle for escape. I want to travel, and learn, and see different peoples etc. but only if it's going to prolong the agony of finding a job that I can stand for more than fifteen minutes. Don't confuse this with taking time off because taking a one ticket is not the same thing as spending a week in vacationland.

So, Lucas, what does it take to buy a one way ticket? I might have done nothing but confuse the issue but if you can keep a clear head, handle your LSD, and think about the matter at hand instead of your penis than you just might make it down the road and not to palookaville. And stay away from parasites because once the disease is in your system, the liquor can't be too far behind.

Yo, brothers and sisters. I need your questions. Please, don't ask me about Yeasthead though. There is a painful side of my personality, and my comic strip serves just to vent it. The fact that the poisonous gas filters down on you is not my problem. Once that crap leaves my hands it becomes public domain. The Bones column is the hardcore thinker in me. Less emotion, more fact. If you want to read more about my personal problems then keep it up. However, if it is knowledge that you seek then let me try to lead you down the path. There I go, sounding all self important again. But Jesus Christ, 8 photos, 84 lines, and Yeasthead later I give you the Collegian. This might not be such an achievement though because right now I feel more like "Sybil" than a journalist. Send questions to J. Talerman, Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst Ma, 01003.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Lecture held on Black women and the family

By JOSEPH L HILL JR.
Collegian Staff

Issues that affect today's women of color, was the focus of a symposium that took place this weekend from 9am to 2pm at the Campus Center. During the morning, workshops were held by women who discussed the concerns of their own particular ethnic group.

The keynote address, entitled Black women and the family, was delivered by Dr. Joyce Ladner, Professor of Sociology at Howard University.

It is important for women " to be able to combine their activism with scholarship,"said Ladner, citing her own experience as a member of a generation she called "the Emmitt Till generation." Till was a young African-American, 14 years old, who was murdered in the 1950s for calling a White woman "baby."

In the mid 1970s certain trends began to develop in the Black family such as the decline in family income, the number of female headed households was increasing, and an increase in Black on Black crime, according to Ladner.

People how were raised in this era "had fewer structural supports than any generation," hence there "increasing became no space for them in the economy,"said Ladner.

These trends led to an increase in the number of teenage mothers, according to Ladner who told of a woman who was a grandmother at the age of 27. These young parents, still in the workforce could not "offer the same child care that they perhaps obtained from their own parents," said Ladner.

The political, educational and economic institutions of this country have a profound effect on poor Black women, and how they perceived these institutions is critical to understanding the aspirations of poor women of color.

"The intellectual rigors of scholarship and the uncompromising belief that social action must compliment scholarship," moved her to gather information on Black women in an "attempt to understand how they perceived Black womanhood And how they are trying to achieve womanhood behavioral and attitudinaly."said Ladner.

Many of the poor women of color maintain a positive outlook on life despite their harsh environment, "they saw their environments as places they wanted to change,"said Ladner.

There is a need to view poor women of color as "resourceful, normal women who are trying to cope with some of the harshest conditions of life," as opposed to viewing their "methods of coping as a weakness or apathy,"said Ladner.

The symposium was sponsored by the Minority Student Association, and co-sponsored by the Bridge Program of the Everywoman's Center.

Dr. Lenworth Gunther delivered a lecture on the need to view Black Thought as a continuous cycle of ideas.

Gunther discusses Black thought

By THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

"We must not make the mistake of failing to recognize the continuity of our history", Dr. Lenworth Gunther admonished recently at a lecture in the Campus Center.

Dr. Gunther, the recipient of four degrees from Columbia University, including a Phd in history,two Ma.degrees and one Ba.,as well as a Ford Foundation Fellowship, teaches at Essex County College in New Jersey.

Dr. Gunther premised his lecture by saying that Blacks have a tendency to compartmentalize their leaders and their leaders' ideologies rather than recognize the continuity of the Black struggle in the African diaspora.

Professor Gunther gave as an example the popular tendency on the part of some to percieve Marcus Garvey and Booker T. Washington as being of dramatically different mind-sets regarding Black enterprise. Gunther asserts that the only real difference between Washington and Garvey was in Washington's willingness to accept the contributions of White patrons. Gunther emphasized that, regarding the publications that were a principle source of revenue for the organizations of both men,this was especially significant. Garvey felt that advertisements reflecting White Euro-American features and values would be detrimental to the already existing poor self-image of Africans in America of his time.

Washington, on the other hand,felt that the it was the economic condition foremost that should be addressed in Black efforts.

Gunther said that Booker T. is rarely credited with his Pan-Africanism. The eminent historian reminded the audience that Booker T. was present in London,the birthcite of the first international Pan-Africanist conference, at the turn of the century, and that it was in his quest to study under Booker that Garvey came to America.

It was,in turn,Garvey that heavily influenced the Honorable Elijah Muhammed, his leadership and structure of the Nation of Islam and hence Malcom X in their respective struggles.

Gunther pointed out that Elijah Muhammed had served as a corporal in Garvey's Universal Improvement Association. It was after this organization that Muhammed fashioned the Nation of Islam, which bred elements of the UIA with elements of orthodox Islam.

Corresponding with Malcom while Malcom was in jail,Elijah developed in him a pupil who later"taught the teachings of Elijah Muhammed;the separate program-Garvey's program, adding in the equation of race..."

Gunther then added that,regarding Martin Luther King, who was Malcom X's principle contemporary,the two men were opposed only in their strategies, not their goals. He said that a thorough analysis of history indicates that the successes of each should not be viewed in isolation but in the context of one another and their times.

of seven different campus cultural organizations and 546 other students. The statement said the organizations supported the four women and "everyone else who experienced racism on this campus."

"We . . . demand that immediate action be taken and no excuses will be accepted by the women of color on this campus. We are positive in our belief that you [the administration] know what to do," Koyana read from the statement.

Dunn joined the group outside of the administration building and said the college has tried to take a stand against racism but that wicked people exist. She said that these wicked people were trying to destroy the college community.

"I can work very hard to educate the educable, but I can't eradicate wickedness," she said.

Before Dunn spoke, Koyana read the notes aloud: "Do you want a banana, little African monkey? Nigger go home"; "One nigger plus one nigger plus one nigger plus one nigger equals four apes in Chapin House"; "Having problems nigger, why don't you go back to the jungle, ape?" The fourth note mocked what each woman would do next year, ending "then there was one left."

"No one has ever called me nigger, and I'm going to make sure no one will ever do it again," Koyana told the group.

A candlelight vigil was held at midnight Thursday night, at which about 600 people attended. On Friday, informal meetings on racism were held throughout the campus.

Last semester, racial notes were passed on the campus. According to Rowe, the administration investigated the incident, but no one was found responsible for the notes. Early this semester, homophobic notes were passed in Hubbard House. An investigation into that incident was closed last month, with no one found responsible.

Dunn said an investigation into the most recent incident was begun Thursday. No answers are expected in the immediate future, she said, although Koyana and others said they are hoping for immediate action.

"We are suffering here," Koyana said.

International fair held this weekend

By THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

This weekend student representatives from over thirty nations gathered together in the Campus Center Auditorium for the International Fair. Student groups from each country sponsored exhibits which presented a cross-section of cultural aspects;from food and clothing to photography to rare artifacts.

Norman Hiza, president of the African Students Association which sponsored an African exhibit, said that he was extremely pleased with the outcome of the Fair,which, for his organization as well as the others, was the culmination of much work.

"Basically we've been doing this the whole month. Of the 53 countries we managed to represent here about 20 of them."

Among the cultural aspects displayed were sub-Saharan sculptures, masks, animal-skinned cases; including a Zeper-skinned briefcase from Tanzania, a Nigerian Talking Drum, Zulu bracelets, woodcraft from Somalia and many other items.

The most visited of the African cultural offerings, however, was the food, which included Zulu-style curried chicken and rice, and beef patties.

According to several students who attended the fair,like sophomore David Grimes, the food was by far the most attractive addition to the event.

"Tasting the great variety of food from all over the world without even leaving campus is an excellent opportunity. And it's great food!"

Included in the diversity of food was Bangladeshian chicken fried in the combination of ginger, curry, garlic, and butter, Dominican Carne de Puerco Guisado,pork cooked in tomato sauce with vinegar,garlic, onions and peppers,Norwegian smoked salmon, Malaysian peppered beef and tomatoes and Ibo-Nigerian Okara balls.

But at that point, Rutgers made a curious move that may have swungs things around. Totally fired up and with all the momentum in their direction, head coach Tom Hayes called time out. The Gorillas took the free rest and put it to good use.

"You only get two time outs in a half, and we didn't want to call one too early," Garber said. "And then they did it for us."

UMass came out of the time out in full gear. Junior Rob Codignotto's first goal started a four-goal flurry that drew the Gorillas back to a 6-all tie. McAleavey had a pair of goals and Tim Soudan one during the stretch, before Rinaldi answered to give the Knights a now-shaky 7-6 halftime edge.

"Give Rutgers a little credit, they came out smoking," LoCascio said. "They knew it was their last chance to make the NCAA's, but we showed a lot of character."

"We came out ready to play, and kept our composure," McAleavey said.

And the composed Gorillas continued to push onward. Chris Tyler took a McAleavey feed in front to tie it 8:02 into the second half and Codignotto gave UM the lead for good a minute later. Soudan and John Gonzales each scored to put UMass up 10-7 after three, an 8-1 swing in the right direction.

The Gorillas, unintimidated by the bigger Knights, had stepped up the physical game, challenging the ball on most every occasion. Soudan and Tyler each had Richter scale, crowd-pleasing hits.

"We're instinctively not a hitting team. We rely more on speed, but we get the ball rolling when we get good hits," Garber said.

Rutgers had one last gasp as Rinaldi and Pete Tortorella sliced the UM lead to 10-9 with plenty of time left. But UMass held the fort as goals by McAleavey (a patented behind-the-head job after a goal-crease scramble), Hiller and Gonzales in the late stages helped put the game away.

start out slowly, then make a comeback only to fall short.

The Owls built a lead early, starting in the first inning. With one out, Temple right fielder Bob Higginson reached first on second baseman Brian Donovan's error and then stole second. He went to third on a passed ball and there were runners on second and third after Brian Yoder walked and stole second. Higginson then scored on a wild pitch and was followed by Yoder on a single by designated hitter Steve Floirendo.

They struck again in the second on a two-run blast over the fence in right-center by Palys, his third dinger of the series. In the third Temple added to its lead on a solo shot by Floirendo, making the score 5-0 after three.

UMass ruined the shutout bid in the fourth when Comeau scored on a double by Lou Olivieri and added another in th??????ke Chambers.

That made it 5-2 going into the final inning and it looked like the Minutemen were going to die quietly when the first batter, Drew Seccafico, struck out looking. But Glen DiSarcina drew a walk and and crossed the plate a little ahead of Steve Kern after Kern deposited a pitch into the grass outside the left-field fence. That made the score 5-4, Temple, with two out but Comeau lined out to right to end the game.

Saturday wasn't much better for UMass. Paul Ciaglo pitched a five-hitter for the Minutemen and dueled his Owl counterpart, Joe Schall to a 4-4 tie to send the game into extra innings.

After giving up walks to the first two batters in the ninth (college doubleheaders only have seven-inning games), Ciaglo was lifted for Jeff Richardson, who soon after watched a pitch to Palys get knocked over the fence for a three-run homer and another run after hitting two batters and giving up a double. UMass couldn't make up the difference in the bottom half and the game ended 8-4, Temple.

The second game of the day was worse as UMass starter Dave Telgheder was tagged for three homers and the hitters were shut out in a 7-0 beating.

"I had expected to do better than this," said Stone. Now all he can do is wait to get another chance next year.

on the track and got in the blocks for the next event, the quarter-mile. With almost no rest, Ambrose won easily in 58.35 seconds and she has qualified through her indoor times, which are carried over to the outdoor season.

The team also had several New England qualifiers over this past weekend. Kathy Holt and Kristin Peers qualified in the 10,000 with St. Pierre, Amanda Norvell shaved five seconds off her best time in the 400 hurdles to qualify, and Diane Ozzolek broke the New England hammer with a toss of 119-1.

Sonja Vaughan ran well, breaking the 2:20 barrier with a 2:18, and then she, along with teammates Shana Smith, Cathy Crocker, and Michelle Pearlstine, qualified their 4x800 relay team for the New Englands. According to LaFreniere, their second-place finish was an excellent and respectable showing in that type of competition.

LaFreniere said, "We're a small team, but we were pretty noticeable out there today."

The team will now prepare for the meet that they've been waiting for -- the New Englands. Although some have qualified for the next step up, the ECACs, the New Englands will be the last competition for most.

NU's Sue Novack and UMass' Cathy Fuhrman were on the board as the teams traded the first two goals.

After Fuhrman's goal, the Gazelles got possession of the ball and went into their slowdown game. UMass held the ball for over 10 minutes before the Wildcats were able to regain possession. But all that passing did not do much good for the Gazelles as they came up empty on the few shot attempts that they created.

"It was tough because they (Northwestern) were really swarming the goal," UMass coach Patti Bossio said. "We really couldn't get in there."

When the Wildcats seized possession of the ball, they did something with it. In fact, the turning point in the game came at 16:10 when Maureen Mullen bounced one in from the perimeter to put the Wildcats up for good just after NU had finally taken the ball away from the Gazelles.

That goal ignited the Wildcats as Sara Pickens picked up the ball on the ensuing faceoff and drove half the length of the field and flipped a little backhander past UMass goalie Liz Keats. Less than a minute later Mullen got free a few feet in front of the net and knocked another goal home to put Northwestern well in command, 4-1.

Murphy got one back for the Gazelles a few minutes later when she rifled a free position shot past NU goalie Brenda Schumacher. But the defense just could not stay with the Wildcats when they started their fast break. When Antoinete Lucas of NU was tripped with about two minutes left in the half the refs called foul and Lucas took the ball right down the middle of the field unmolested and bounced a shot past Keats.

It was a complete turnaround from the day before when the Gazelles had virtually shut down the No. 10 team (Brown) in the country for most of the game.

"Our defense played the best they have all season," Bossio said.

Fuhrman scored two more goals in the second half and Jodi Hubberman one for UMass but the Wildcats were in control the whole way. At least in control of the score, not of their tempers though.

The NU defense decided to get a little too aggressive after Fuhrman cut the lead to 6-3 and Rosie Sealaus was thrown out of the game for her second infraction.

After NU went up 9-5 with just a minute left on the clock, Sara Weisfeldt picked up her second card and was giving the exit sign by the officials.

Crew teams have rough weekend

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Correspondent

The regular season ended on a disappointing note this weekend. for the University of Massachusetts crew teams.

The two boats carried an undefeated record into the weekend, and unfortunately, both boats lost. Saturday, both the men's and women's teams participated in a five-crew race against Williams College, Mercy Hurst, Tufts and the University of Lowell.

The women also raced on Sunday in the Valley Girl Regatta. Their opponents were Amherst, Smith, and Mount Holyoke. Saturday morning went pretty much as expected for the women. The varsity eight had a big win in Williamstown. They had an impressive 11-second victory over Mercyhurst. Williams and Tufts followed. The jayvees were also victorious this weekend. Both of the novice boats that raced on Saturday lost. The A-boat came in third behind Williams and Tufts. The B-boat lost an oar and finished last.

Yesterday's Valley Girl Regatta took place in nearby Hadley, on the Connecticut River. This is a traditionally big race for the women. Next year it will appear even bigger, as it is the only race that the varsity women lost. It was a tough close race, as the Mt. Holyoke crew edged UMass by a tight four seconds. Smith College finished third and Amherst was fourth.

The rest of the team didn't fare too well either on Sunday. The jayvee boat was soundly thrashed by Mt. Holyoke by a huge 20-second margin. Smith College finished third in the race. The novice A-boat also raced and finished third.

The lightweight men ended their season on a sour note. After beating fast, quick boats all season, they finally met their match. The Tufts crew finished eight seconds ahead of UMass. Mercyhurst finished third in the race.

The heavyweight eight finally finished its disappointing season. Their race ended with a UMass protest, after the crew was pushed off course and hit a buoy. They were given a second chance when the race was repeated, but couldn't pull off a victory, finishing second behind Williams College. Mercyhurst came in third and ULowell finished fourth. They went the entire season without a victory.

The men's day wasn't a complete failure, as the jayvee lightweight boat beat Tufts by about eight seconds.

Despite the losses this weekend, both the men's and women's teams had several boats qualify for the New England Championships — which take place next weekend in Worcester.

men's track

of the day for UMass was the 4x200, in which Garfield Vaughn, Felix DeLaRosa, Mike Grey, and Evon Walters of UMass put together a time of 1:30.2, good enough for 5th place in their section. O'Brien described the race as an "icebreaker" for his team. "It shakes out the jitters of running in front of 35,000 people," said O'Brien.

Next came the mile relay. The UMass team of Walters, DeLaRosa, Steve Brown, and Vaughn had a solid performance, posting their fastest time of the year, with a 3:20.4. However O'Brien thought they could have run about three seconds faster (closer to the winning time). "(It was) a little less than what we are capable of running," said O'Brien.

In the distance medley on Friday UMass turned in some good times, but wasn't able to cash in. Herb Heffner started the race off for the men, running the¾ mile in a time of 3:03, the best performance of his life, according to O'Brien. Heffner passed the baton to Brown, who ran a 48.8 400, matching his excellent time in the mile relay that day. Jim McDonald was next to run the 800 leg. He posted a 1:56, his best time of the year. Steve Tolly took the baton for the last leg, the mile. Somehow, UMass was 15 yards behind the front at that point, and Tolly found himself running alone. Playing catch-up, Tolly ran the first half in a grueling 2:02, and consequently finished in a time of 4:16, way off his best time in the mile. "It's awful tough to run a mile all by yourself," said O'Brien. UMass finished the distance medley in a total time of 10:04.4.

The sprint medley was the weakest performance of the day for the men, according to O'Brien. "We don't have any margin for error. We have to have four guys run their maximum performances."

Men's tennis sixth at NE's

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

After a dog fight between the top-ranked teams, the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team returned home with a sixth-place finish from this weekend's New England Conference tournament.

"Everyone played well, especially [Paul] Audet," said UMass coach Manny Roberts. "Sixth place is repsectable out of 35-team draw. We probably could have done better if we had won the close crucial matches which would have given us a few more points."

The New Englands, like the Atlantic 10 tournament, works on a point system. Each player faces his opponent who is at the same level of play. For example, number one singles from UMass plays the number one singles players from the other participating teams in the draw.

Each win constitutes a point for the team. UMass ended up with a total of 18 points, tying with Franklin Pierce College, and only missed fifth place by two points and fourth by three.

Audet was the star of the team, making his way into the semifinal round of the tournament. He defeated the number three singles player from Rhode Island College, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, in a long three-set match. Then in the second round won an easy set 6-1, 6-1 against Western Connecticut College.

In the third round, Audet met with his Franklin Pierce opponent and beat him, 6-0, 7-5. His winning streak ended in the semis where he lost to Central Connecticut, 6-0, 6-2.

"Audie was mentally spent more than anything else," Roberts said.

All of the Minutemen players made it to the singles quarterfinal round, including the number one player Brian Gable, who was seeded fourth. Gable won his matches against Southern Maine University and Franklin Pierce, both in straight sets. In the quarters he lost to his New Hampshire College opponent, 6-0, 6-1.

Roberts said that after two rounds and four sets of tennis, Gable was hurting from his recently-recovered ankle injury.

The Minutemen's three doubles teams all advanced to the quarterfinals. At number three doubles Humberto Soto and Matt Murphy were seeded number two. They received a bye in the first round, giving them extra rest. In the second round Soto and Murphy took an easy 6-0, 6-1 win from Bryant College, but lost in the quarters to Bentley College in a close 7-5, 6-3 match.

The Minutemen are scheduled to meet Central Connecticut tomorrow, but the match may be cancelled because of a measles epidemic on the Central Conn. campus.

Gorillas rally to knock off Rutgers, 13-10

Sophomore attack Jim McAleavey had three goals and an assist as the Gorillas downed Rutgers, 13-10 Saturday at the Hill.

Four-goal hole not enough to keep men's lax team from eighth straight victory

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

There is a reason they play four quarters in lacrosse.

Saturday, Rutgers University learned the hard way that it takes more than 15 minutes to beat the Gorillas. The University of Massachusetts men's lax squad dug itself a 6-2 hole and then turned on the jets to post an impressive 13-10 win at the Hill.

Most of the late-arriving Hill crowd showed up to find the Gorillas in a heap of trouble as the Scarlet Knights, a strong first-quarter team, let loose on UMass in the early going. But UMass put forth a solid effort from start to finish in winning its eighth consecutive game.

"I honestly think we're a 60-minute team. We've got a lot of veterans and we didn't quit," said UMass senior goalie Sal LoCascio.

The Gorillas can thank their All-American netminder that the deficit wasn't larger. LoCascio, who finished with 20 saves in another marvelous effort, held back several Rutgers chances to blow the game open.

Then the defense, which played so brilliantly in the win over Harvard, picked itself up and kept the Knights in check. The work of the defensive midfield helped to overcome a 23-4 Rutgers advantage on faceoffs.

"We got the ground balls and hustled. We wanted to win," said sophomore attack Jim McAleavey, who had a hat trick.

Most of the credit for that should go to players like freshman Mario Lopez and senior Kris Cuozzo, who forced a lot of Rutgers turnovers and started the break on several occasions.

But in the beginning, it looked as if Rutgers was going to come in and embarass UMass in its own yard. The Knights rattled out to a 3-0 lead and stretched it to 6-2 before the Gorillas began the comeback.

Greg Rinaldi started the scoring just 1:28 into the contest with his first of three goals, and scores by Lou Fusilli and Scott Moore made it 3-0 just 5:11 into the game.

Junior attack Scott Hiller (three goals) got one back on a break started on a steal by Cuozzo. Marc Feinberg fed Hiller with the pass for a bounce shot to get the Gorillas on the board.

Rutgers would get two more sandwiched around another Hiller tally to go up 5-2 after one. And things looked bleak when Fusilli rolled out from the left and scored his second goal to make it 6-2 at 4:05 of the second.

UMass wasn't playing badly, but Rutgers pounced on a couple of simple mistakes and cashed them in.

"We weren't flat. But three of their first five goals I'd call gift goals," said UM coach Dick Garber.

Gazelles drop final two games

Losses to Brown and Northwestern end UM season at 2-11

By GEORGE AUSTIN

Bad Boys? Bad who? The way the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team and Northwestern University were playing yesterday at Totman Field, they made Bill Laimbeer and Rick Mahorn look like angels.

The Wildcats scratched and clawed all the way to a 9-5 decision over UMass after having two players thrown out of the game for misconduct in the second half. Junior Sue Murphy, UMass' leading scorer, was thrown out by the officials after receiving a red card for misconduct with about seven minutes to go in the game.

But what the heck. It was the last game of the season for the Gazelles who finished up at 2-11 after losing to Brown University, 7-5, the day before.

"I think next year, we'll be better," sophomore Liz Hoye said. "It was the last game. We wanted to get a lot out, we wanted to win it."

For a while it looked like the Gazelles had a good shot of pulling this one out. Within the first three minutes,

Baseball's A-10 hopes swept away by Temple

By DENNIS MADSEN

Well, it's final. The University of Massachusetts baseball team will not be going to the playoffs this year. The Minutemen had to take three out of four games from Temple University over the weekend in order to qualify for post-season play but instead was swept in both doubleheaders at Lorden Field.

On Saturday, the Minutemen lost the first game 8-4 in extra innings and dropped the second 7-0. The following day they lost 1-0 in the first half and 5-4 in the second game.

The UMass offense struggled all weekend, getting shut out twice and scraping up an average of only seven hits in the other two games. Coach Mike Stone identified one of the major problems easily.

"Clutch hitting," he said. "We had opportunities, consistent opportunities, we had people in scoring position with less than two out and we didn't deliver."

The first game yesterday was typical of the Minutemen's problems. Brian Conroy hurled a one-hitter, giving up only one run when he walked Temple third-baseman Dave Hallen, who took second on a fielder's choice and scored on the only Owl hit of the game, a single by center fielder Mike Palys.

Unfortunately for Conroy, his teammates at the plate were shut out. They had the bases loaded in the third with one out but a struggling Drew Comeau (3-for-11 for the weekend with four strikeouts and only one RBI) popped out to short and Brian Bright (0-for-13 with three strikeouts) lined out to center, stranding all three. They also left two more in the sixth after having men on first and second with one out.

The second game saw the Minutemen

Men's track team faces big-time at Penn Relays

By ROBERT SIMPSON

There's an old saying they use in sports (and in life in general): 'pressure is self-inflicted'. Yeah, well that's really easy to say when you don't have to run in the biggest race of your life, against the best competition, and in front of 35,000 spectators.

The University of Massachusetts men's track team spent last Thursday and Friday facing pressure in the Penn Relays, the biggest track meet in the country, in Philadelphia, and were introduced to big-time track.

"The best way to teach is for them to actually see it," said Minutemen coach Ken O'Brien. "The final touches are to put them in that kind of lab experiment so they can see what's involved."

The men's strategy was simple: run the best race of your life. "For us to compete successfully down there we have to have personal best performances," said O'Brien.

On Thursday senior Reinardo Flores finished seventh in his section in the 5000 meters. Flores, one of UMass' many flexible, talented distancers, ran in a time of 14:32.2.

Friday would have meant five relay races for UMass, but O'Brien, believing five races in one day was too much for his team, decided to drop the 4x100. The first event

Minutewomen qualify at Fitchburg St. race

By RICK SETO

For a while, the University of Massachusetts women's track team was on a roller coaster. They had done poorly in their scoring meets, finishing last both times, but sandwiched in between was an excellent non-scoring meet at Smith College.

The Minutewomen continued that trend as they did well again in their last regular season meet, a non-scoring one at Fitchburg State. Two Minutewomen had their best performances to date while another kept motoring her way to first-place finishes.

Carla DeSantis threw a season-best 142-3 in the javelin, which qualified her for ECACs, but even that is still far short of her school record of 158-8, which she set last year. "I think she's starting to come around," said head coach Julie LaFreniere. Part of DeSantis' shortcomings can be attributed to senioritis, which makes it tough to concentrate on things like track.

Freshman Amy St. Pierre won her first race of the year, as the distance finally suited her pace. The phrase, 'The longer, the better,' suits St. Pierre. In her first race at 10,000 meters this year, St. Pierre won and qualified for ECACs with a time of 37 minutes, 47 seconds. "It was an outstanding performance considering she had nobody to run with," said LaFreniere.

As usual, Lee Ann Ambrose was a double winner back-to-back in the 100 and 400. After winning the 100 under the ECAC standard in 12.38, she stayed

TAs hold classes at Whitmore

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Teaching assistants, claiming they are desperate for unity in light of impending budget cuts, taught more than 75 class sections yesterday in the halls and outskirts of the Whitmore Administration Building.

More than 150 graduate student teaching assistants, of the 1,700 employed by the University of Massachusetts, have registered for the "teach out," which will also run from 8 p.m. to 5 p.m. today during scheduled class hours.

Undergraduate students in classes ranging from Spanish sections to political science were strewn about the building's hallways as well as beside signs on the lawn and walkways of Whitmore's east side, protesting the state budget cuts.

Renee Heberle, a TA in political science, said the ongoing "teach out" is an attempt to demonstrate heavy workloads and insufficient wages, which she said are among the lowest in the Northeast.

"We do a good amount of the teaching on campus," Heberle said. "The protest is a symbol showing the necessity of TAs on campus. I think it's going to be effective across the state."

Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Provost Richard O'Brien and several students addressed the TAs during a noon rally at the north end of Whitmore.

"We need to try to carry the importance of graduate education as an important aspect of the future of a great public University," Duffey said, urging students to continue fighting against the cuts.

Despite a 103 percent pay increase for TAs over the past seven years, "we still lag behind an adequate level of compensation for TAs," Duffey said. "We clearly have a long way to go."

Heberle said a major roadblock for TAs is their lack of protection from random cutbacks and layoffs because of their failure to organize as a unit.

"TAs are vulnerable because we don't have a union," she said. "[The administration] can level our stipends and cut positions within departments. Our future is literally on the line."

"Teach out" organizers said several departments are gearing up for position layoffs and pay cuts when the state senate releases its budget this summer.

Bruce Tull, a TA in economics, said of the 62 TAs in his department, nearly 40 will face a one-third cut in pay of their current average salary of $6,500.

"You can't live on it. We just go farther into debt every year," Tull said. "Rent is $3,600 a year, that's a two-thirds stipend right there."

Undergraduate students observing the rally and participating in classes offered support for the TAs' efforts, but remained skeptical as to the effect it will have on cutbacks.

"I don't think the administration really cares," said UMass junior Scot Hawthorne. "They're in such a position where they don't have to, they still have their jobs."

TAs have collected hundreds of signatures on three petitions circulated throughout classes participating in the "teach out." The petitions demand higher pay and better work conditions and will be sent to Chancellor Joseph Duffey, the UMass Board of Regents, and the state legislature, organizers said.

Racist incidents at Smith continue over weekend

By LAURA KLIVANS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Another racially harrassing note — the fifth in six days — was passed on the Smith College campus over the weekend, Director of Affirmative Action E. Shelton Burden announced yesterday at an all-campus meeting.

"I am here to give you the facts and bring you up to date," she said. "Another note was passed on this campus over the weekend. Pleased be assured we are dealing with it."

College President Mary Maples Dunn called the meeting, which effectively closed the campus, to discuss the four racially harrassing notes passed to four Black female students last week. The students, two African-American, one Kenyan and one South African, are all residents of Chapin House on the campus.

Burden said the school has contacted and consulted with the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The case has been turned over to the Hampshire-Franklin County District Attorney.

Dunn told the assembly that Ginetta Berloso, chair of the Hispanic organization Nosotras, called her last Wednesday to "tell me about the outrage at Chapin House," and said to Dunn, "this is my home."

"And indeed it is the home of many of us," Dunn said. "When I went to Chapin on Wednesday, I wept so much I could hardly speak."

Sophomore Cheryl Coward read a list of six demands and asked for "immediate implementation." The demands include: the immediate expulsion of the perpetrator; a class dealing with racism and means of combatting it; mandatory racial and cultural awareness workshops in individual houses on campus; increased space in the college's Cultural Center to meet the expected 20 percent minimum minority population by 1998-99, and that the college find space for its administrators in a building other than the center.

Coward, on behalf of Black students at the college, asked for a response from Dunn by May 14.

Student Government Association President Farah Pandith told her peers that "nothing I can say will alleviate the frustration and anguish. [The notes]

Vigil recalls all Holocaust victims

By JOHN SWANSON

Jews were not the only victims of the Holocaust. Today's memorial service and candle-lighting will focus on the variety of groups who were killed by the Nazis, according to the president of Hillel.

Alisa Berkowitz said the University of Massachusetts Jewish students association is planning a noon ceremony, which will take place on the Student Union steps. The ceremony will observe Yom Hashoah, the May 2 commemoration of the Holocaust victims, which included homosexuals, blacks, Jehovah's Witnesses, political dissenters and mentally and physically disabled people, she said.

The ceremony is part of Holocaust Memorial Week, which is taking place now through Saturday. Cincy Spungin, chairperson of the observance, said today's ceremony will be led by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter. Activities will include speeches by Provost Richard O'Brien and Judaic Studies Department Chair Shmuel Bolozsky, a poetry reading by Hillel member Celeste Krochak and singing by Judaic Studies Professor Julius Lester, she said. Spungin said each speaker will light a Yartzheit candle as part of the annual tradition.

"Normally we light six candles for the six million Jews [who died in the Holocaust]," she said, "but this year it's 13 for all of the 13 million victims, not just the Jews."

Also included in the week's activities will be a slide presentation by Allen Mietla, a son of a Holocaust survivor. The program will take place in Memorial Hall tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. The six-part documentary, Shoah, will be shown throughout the week, one part each day, at 6:30 p.m. in Campus Center, room 903. All events are free and open to the public.

Sponsors of the week's programs include Hillel, the Student Government Association, the Chancellor's Office, Central Area Government and the Office of Third World Affairs.

Duffey calls meeting to discuss research, cuts

Chancellor Joseph Duffey has scheduled an open meeting for today to discuss military funding for science projects at the University of Massachusetts and impending state budget cuts.

The meeting, which is open to all members of the campus community, is scheduled from 4 to 5:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod lounge.

Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson said the meeting is expected to be attended by University faculty and staff, as well as several campus organizations.

"I think lust is great. . . it is not sexist to be sexy"

Sex educator sees change in roles

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

The sex roles men and women follow should be more open to interpretation and modification — and just because a man comes on to a woman he should not be considered sexist, said controversial "sexologist" Roger Libby.

"I think sexual initiation and asking people out on a date should be more fifty-fifty.

PROFILE

I think women should not wait for the guy to initiate," said Libby, a former UMass professor.

Libby, who holds a doctorate in sociology, feels many men and women are too timid about sex and sexual matters and should have more fun with their sexual urges, he said.

"I think lust is great, but I think people ought to be caring and honest. It is not sexist to be sexy," he said.

The Pioneer Valley is too heavily influence by feminist groups who call men sexist because they like attractive women, therefore creating a stifling atmosphere that is not conducive to healthy sexual behavior, Libby said.

Libby also asserts that the distinction between sexual harassment and flirtation is very unclear.

"It's the crazy valley. To say that it's the happy valley is the biggest joke alive," he said. "It's the common thing to call a guy sexist here."

Peg Aloi, a graduate English student and Valley Woman's Voice organizer, said Libby's statements are painted with too broad a brush for the valley because of the diverse population of faculty, residents and students present here.

"You can't judge an entire group of people because of one small part of it," she said.

"Roger Libby wants to say that this is an example of very healthy attitudes in men to idolize this woman's body," she said referring to the Playboy centerfold model who recently visited the Amherst News Rooom.

"[Women] see it as exploitation by men," she said.

Simone Rinaldi, the assitant coordinator of the Educator/Advocate Program for the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts, said that people need to understand the larger societal issues to put Libby's statements into perspective.

"It's very, very important to talk about the environment we are in. When women are brought up and they are complimented they are expected to say 'oh, thank you,'" Rinaldi said. However, when they are approached and decline the compliment they are called frigid, she said.

Rinaldi believes that because societal teachings say women are inferior to men and are sex objects, this continues the cycle that causes rape, pornography, sexual discrimination and abuse.

"When a woman stands up for herself and says 'I don't appreciate this [attention],' instead of saying this woman is a human being and this offends her, she is seen as frigid and that's not fair," she said.

Rinaldi said that feminists are not against sex, but are labeled as being so because they postulate equality for women.

"The bottom line is that men and women have the right to live in a society where they are not made into victims.

"That is why rape and pornography exist. Because women do not have the same power as men," she said.

Despite cuts, library lands key collection

By JENNIFER GARVIN
Collegian Correspondent

In a year when budget cuts have hurt the school's ability to acquire books, Portuguese studies at University of Massachusetts will be strengthened by the recent acquisition of a 900-volume collection of Portuguese works, said Siegfried Fellers, chief bibliographer and director of collection development.

"We've been working very hard to build a Portuguese collection since 1970; this is a great help." said Pauline Collins, bibliographer for Spanish, Portuguese, and Latin American Studies at the library.

State funding for library acquisitions at all 29 of the state colleges and Uiversities has been cut completely for next year. At UMass-Amherst, this means library acquisitions will be cut by two-thirds from this year — a loss of $2 million — according to Richard Talbot, University director of libraries.

Talbot said the library would have to cut is periodical subscriptions in half, and would buy approximately 8,000 books, down from 45,000 this year.

All of which makes the library especially lucky to have received the collection, Collins said.

UMass Portuguese Professor Frank Fagundes said that the collection's works will be "very useful for the faculty and our students, including visiting scholars."

Fagundes said the collection is an exceptional gift to the University, not only because of the benefits for students in the Portuguese studies, but because some of the more ancient and rare volumes are extremely expensive and the University could not acquire them otherwise.

The collection's two specific focuses are the 19th century and the contemporary period of Portuguese history.

At present, Collins, with the help of UMass Portuguese major Rodrigo Soto, is processing the collection and it is expected to be on the shelves later this year.

The books will be identifiable by a Susan C. Schneider bookplate, Collins said.

In Smith lecture, actress discusses refugee crisis

By PAUL McALEER
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Children in refugee camps need immense amounts of love and help, actress Liv Ullmann said during a discussion on refugees recently at Smith College.

The lecture was part of a three-day symposium at the college, titled "Teaching Ethics: The Issues of Refugees," which ended Saturday.

Ullmann, known for her roles in movies such as Cries and Whispers and Autumn Sonata, is a goodwill ambassador for UNICEF and vice president of the International Rescue Committee, an organization involved in helping and resettling refugees.

She said one child dies every other second. "All human beings are not born free," she said. "Today, most children are not born with rights, but with threats."

Ullmann told the audience of 150 stories of children she has encountered all over the world, quoting what the children said. One boy in Cambodia said "Sometimes I cry, but only when it rains, so the other children will not see it."

She talked about a little girl, also from Cambodia, who was playing with a hat and bag Ullmann given her, but gave the things away when she saw that a little boy was in need of help. She said she was moved by the fact that a child who had so little would give away what little she had.

"Sometimes it pays to be different"

Hartford Mayor speaks on women in politics

By LAURA KLIVANS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Combining humor with life experiences, the first black woman mayor of a Northeastern city told Smith College students, administration and faculty that she "didn't realize the implications of being a first."

Hartford Mayor Carrie Saxon Perry, 56, spoke to about 70 people in the Neilson Library Browsing Room Sunday night for her lecture in the college's Women, Public Policy and Social Change lecture series.

"Sometimes it pays to be different," she said, referring to her race and sex, adding that American women have had a long struggle to acquire full participation in the nation's economy, but still face "enormous roadblocks."

She said women are still in need of an equal rights amendment, and must "brace against the antics of right-to-lifers."

Perry said she is concerned with teen pregnancy in her city, which 136,000 people — more than half minorities — call home. "We must reduce the numbers of babies having babies," she said, adding that she is also alarmed at the infant mortality rate in Hartford.

"The skyrocketing figure of infant mortality rate in the city of Hartford is similar to Third World countries," she said.

Perry said the way to right many of the wrongs she faces is through the political process, adding that more women must enter the process to "further their own agenda and that of humanity as well."

"The day has come when women should cease being involved in politics . . . and jump totally into the fray," she said, calling for a "shift from passive roles to hardball politics."

Perry said she originally became involved in politics as an activist in Connecticut in the 1960s.

"I was marching and crying and laying down in front of stuff," she said.

In 1976, she said she ran for the state legislature because she "believed leadership should reflect the composition of the community," with her neighborhood mostly "people of color."

As a legislator, she said she "looked around and said, 'There's never been a Black woman mayor.'" She ran for mayor and in her first bid for the office was elected in November, 1987.

She is running for re-election this year. "I opened up the windows a little and let a little sunlight in," she said of her office.

As mayor, Perry has led the way to the homeless acquiring the right to vote. She said she tried to accomplish this legislatively, but when that failed, had an attorney draw up a "declaratory ruling" that set guidelines to allow the homeless to vote.

"Our country must learn the difference between a right and a benefit," she said, citing housing and voting as rights.

She spoke of a photo exhibit featuring famous Black women, including Perry. She was not humbled "because politicians can't be humble," she said, of seeing her photograph with Coretta Scott King, Lena Horne and others.

"Women don't like to use the word power," she said. "First, we have to accept the responsibility of being powerful. Second, we have to enjoy it."

College plan would draw on community colleges

By JOHN SUTTON
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Smith College has recently made a proposal that would encourage community college students to continue their education at the college during the summer.

The proposal is part of "The Smith Design for Institutional Diversity," and will join Smith with the Greater Hartford Community College. Smith College is scheduled to recruit 25 students who will become part of a five-week residential exchange program in the summer of 1990.

"The idea is to bring them to campus, take courses and get them excited about a liberal arts college," said Debra Bradley, news director in the college's Office of College Relations. "The students will get a sense of what the four-year college is like even though it is summer."

Smith College President Mary Maples Dunn said the college believes the program has a great chance for success. "We are both very enthusiastic about the benefits of such a summer program for our institutions, and we see possibilities for further collaboration in other areas," she said.

The proposal, approved last October, cited studies indicating that students of color do not transfer to four-year schools at the same rate as white students. "As a result, Blacks and Latinos remain underrepresented in baccalaureate degree programs and, therefore, in professional fields for which such degrees are required," the proposal states.

Students who participate in the program are selected according to their academic ability and interest in the liberal arts, Bradley said, adding that students will take two three-credit courses, which will be team-taught by faculty members from both the college and GHCC. Professional development opportunities are offered to faculty members who engage in this program by working with Smith's Center for Academic Development to plan and teach courses, she said.

Smith is one of the five liberal arts institutions receiving grants through the Vassar/Association of American Colleges National Project on Community College Transfer, Bradley said. Vassar College was the first institution to have the exchange between four-year schools and community colleges, she said.

Although the program is expected to cost $70,000 for its first year, Smith College has received a matching $25,000 grant along with funding provided by the Ford Foundation, AT&T Foundation and Chase Manhattan Bank, she said.

School officials have said they hope to strengthen its bond with GHCC, where 49 percent of the students are from minority groups, 31 percent Black and 12 percent Latino.

"Those who hate without cause are my enemies," Dunn said. "At the march [last Thursday from the house to the administration building], somebody told me I was accountable. I'm here to tell you that I will be held accountable."

Dunn said "there won't be any talk about suspension," because it is "not enough to reject the wrongdoer, we must demonstrate that her kind will not prevail." Dunn called for an "alliance not only against racism but for a better society."

"Are we going to allow a racist and cowardly enemy to undermine our future? I say no," she said.

She also told how, 10 years ago, her life was changed during a visit to a refugee camp in Thailand. It was there, amidst the lepers in the camp, that she met a person who reminded her of her grandmother. This sight made her realize she had to help refugees. "Someone else's pain is . . . my pain," she said.

She also urged students to do what they could to help. "We live in deeds, not in years," she said. "The human rights of children . . . hinge on what they [the children] mean to us."

She said we must help people in need everywhere. "To be a refugee is to be a person who has no home," and homeless people everywhere "are never bums, bag ladies, or creeps."

Environmental Engineers

Make An Investment In The Future.
Yours And The Environment.

A lot of engineering firms have an environmental engineering department. But at GZA, environmental engineering is our specialty — and everybody knows it. When government or private industry needs a firm to handle a large and difficult project, they turn to us. We have over two decades of experience in all phases of environmental and geotechnical engineering—from the design and construction of buildings, dams, tunnels and airports to wastewater disposal, environmental permitting, and hazardous waste investigation and management. We pride ourselves on our progressive, informal office atmosphere, our participatory management style, and our steadfast commitment to public health and environmental integrity. And if you always thought you had to pay a price for idealism, you were wrong. Because our considerable resources enable us to offer our people a compensation package that is one of the best in the industry.

If you're looking for a career with an engineering firm that is both financially successful and environmentally conscious, GZA is the place to be.

We have entry-level openings (B.S., M.S.) in geotechnical and environmental engineering:

- Civil/Geotechnical Engineering
- Chemical Engineering
- Environmental Engineering
- Chemistry
- Biology

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions of the Daily Collegian are those of the majority of the editorial board. Columns, letters and cartoons do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian.

There is no color in brutality

Let me present a hypothetical situation:

Say that your sister, girlfriend, best friend, mother (a female person whom you are close to or are friendly with) is an avid jogger. This female loves to jog so much that it really does not matter to her what the weather is like or what time it is — she is going to jog when she feels like it. This woman has a stressful job and a full life, so she squeezes in her jogging time when she can.

Meredith O'Brien

The woman decides to go jogging in her neighborhood one night because she had had a very long day. She decides to jog by the park, where she usually jogs. No big deal.

But then, while feeling herself unwind as she takes peaceful strides by blooming trees, she is grabbed from behind. Her calmness is shockingly disrupted by a stabbing sense of fear.

She realizes that she is surrounded by a group of eight young boys who don't look like they are older than 15, and do not look like they want to know the time.

This strong, self-assured woman struggles and these children start to beat her in the head with a pipe. The boys hold her down, while four of them take turns raping her, all the while still trying to keep her submissive through beatings, and stab her in the head and thigh.

After the boys are through, they leave her lying on the ground bleeding profusely. They think she is dead.

But this woman that you know is not dead. She is found alive and is rushed to the hospital. Her life is presently being preserved through the aid of a life-support system. If she recovers, she will most likely have permanent brain damage.

Later, the boys are apprehended and they brag about how fun their "wilding" was. They, the group of 13-17 year old boys, show no remorse. They could really care less. It was only a woman that they were having their fun with.

Not only does this violence make everyone sick and horrified, the youngness and attitudes of the attackers is equally as shocking. You really would not care what the color of the attackers' skin is. It does not matter what color you female friend/relative is.

An innocent woman was brutally beaten and raped by young boys. Period. The end. Color has nothing to do with that fact.

Granted, maybe those boys did not think that they were doing anything wrong. Maybe the root of their problem lies in the fact that they live in a violent area and that they have no place to turn to but the streets for their amusement. There is a problem because children are thinking like violent criminals. We need to understand why this is happening in the minds of children.

That does not make this a separate issue. It is horrifying, as is any act of violence. Young boys show no regret for committing such vile atrocities.

People should not label the coverage of this sensationalized incident racist. The publicity is just what it needs. Maybe if this country realizes what life in the ghettos does to children (as young as 13!), something will be done to try to help the children of the ghettos, to try understand why incidents like these are happening. Maybe it will get people thinking. Maybe this incident should be thought of as a motivator for people to start doing something about the ghettos and stop talking about it.

But color is not the central issue, the woman lying comatose in a hospital bed is. Her life is being used as a political weapon. The color of her attackers is being used in the same way. She won't jog again — regardless of her color.

Boycott Exxon to make a stand

Today has been designated as the host day for a boycott of Exxon Oil in response to the Valdez disaster in Alaska's Prince William Sound.

The MassPIRG Student Board of Directors, USPIRG, Ralph Nader, legislatures and environmental groups are organizing this boycott to demonstrate to companies and individuals who use or produce dangerous products and materials that they are accountable for any damages to public health and the environment as a result of their actions, and failing to assume the financial and political responsibility will not be tolerated. This boycott will encourage better and safer policies concerning oil transport, and in the case of a spill, cleaning up damaged areas.

By boycotting Exxon Oil, the student body can demonstrate their disdain of harm to the environment generated by disasters that were preventable.

Show support for a UHS bus stop

You have just sprained your ankle playing basketball and the pain is so intense that any form of pressure on it is unbearable. Your concerns of adapting to crutches and your road to recovery take an immediate back seat to the concern of the Health Services journey. Not everyone has the luxury of an automobile to escort him/her to get medial attention. Also, Health Services is about a quarter mile from the nearest bus stop. The need for a shuttle bus is evident (ambulance services and student security are for emergencies only). Not only will students, but employees and families of the Five College Area will benefit from this community service. Yet the University of Massachusetts Transit has rejected the addition of a Health Services bus stop in the past.

These organizations should be doing everything possible to alleviate this public health hazard. We urge your support for a shuttle to Health Services. Please visit our table and sign our petition on Wednesday, May 3 in the Campus Center Concourse.

Student Health and Advisory Board (SHAB)

The military in perspective

If you've been here awhile, you'll have noticed that every spring students stage a major protest (usually silly) against the UMass administration. One year they decried the ban on coed bathrooms. Another year they protested alcohol restrictions. This year it's research funded by the Department of Defense (DOD).

Rusty Denton

I suppose spring fever among militants requires a cause, but their ideas about US militarism are a myth. Fewer than one percent of Americans are in the military. Unlike third world countries, we have no history of military coups. Unlike the peace-loving Swiss, we have no mandatory military service. Unlike the peace-loving Soviets, we don't supply nerve gas to Iraq and send our youth over the border with "toy bombs" to annex our neighbors. Unlike the peace-loving communist Chinese, we rarely send in the army to beat up on demonstrators, although we have been known to call out the National Guard to protect them.

Oh, it's true, US military expenditures were 27 billion dollars in 1987 — just over a quarter of federal outlays. But that's a small amount compared to Soviet military spending. And unlike some taxes and social programs we're all familiar with, federal spending for the military was explicitly licensed in the Constitution by the founding fathers.

That money doesn't just buy tanks, ships and aircraft. It is spent building bridges and power plants stateside at the request of local communities. It pays for pensions, hospitals, a medical school, college benefits for veterans, and several excellent undergraduate academies. US military money has backed pioneering research in computers, semiconductors, solar power, cold weather research, communications, astronomy, the ozone layer, malaria and AIDS, to name just a few projects over the years. A great deal of that work has been published and widely used by the civilian public. On this campus, more than a few professors get most of their grant money from the DOD — and by the way, part of the university overhead portion of those grants is used to help pay the real cost of running undergraduate lab courses here.

But suppose you still think military budgets take money that would be better spent on social programs. Consider that in 1987 we payed 195 billion dollars in interest on our burgeoning national debt — interest payments that rival military outlays in magnitude. That's significant for two reasons. First, budgets for social programs don't suffer because of the defense budget; Congress just borrows more money to keep both going. Second, the interest on that borrowing is fast becoming a bigger sink for dollars than the Pentagon.

Now I'm not saying that the US military isn't an overfunded Goliath; I think it is. However, neither is it the monster that campus protesters would have us believe. It is presidents, not the military, who start and end wars. And a more dangerous group than military is the "peace at any price" pacifists.

Pacifist intellectuals sided with Hitler as he claimed after each successive annexation that it was his last. They disbelieved reports of genocide. Even after the war those pacifists excused Stalin's murderous occupation of eastern European nations that never invited him in. In a form of cultural suicide, western peace-mongers these days use the same phrase coined by failed pacifists in the last generation — Peace In Our Time — as they applaud every time aggressive despots from Africa and Central America accuse our nation of imperialism, conveniently ignoring communist expansionism using bullets as doctrine.

But don't expect anti-defense protesters on campus to be any different; the lessons of history have been lost on them. Maybe when spring fever has passed they'll come to their senses.

McGovern shows no mercy at a political bloodbath

Not that Pat McGovern begins each morning on Beacon Hill with a glass of OJ and that day's Collegian ed/op page. . . but it's worth a shot. Even a cheap one.

By way of background, McGovern (D-Lawrence) is the enormously frazzled chairperson of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, a body currently charged with spontaneously generating enough dough to bail out those public agencies of the Commonwealth that are short for cash. Which is roughly all of them.

Last Thursday, McGovern and a few fellow committee members showed face in Springfield at a public hearing designed to give those of us on the receiving end of state education funds a good chance to plead our case.

Following a few cameo photo-ops from local politicians concerned enough about education to spend two minutes fondling the issue in public, the committee turned its attention to the testimony of Franklyn Jenifer, chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Ed. Basically the Big Cheese, and a pretty well spoken guy, Jenifer gave them the usual "save our schools" rap then stuck around for a little Q and A from the committee. That's when things got ugly.

With Jenifer hauling the immediate fate of our state university system on stage last Thursday, McGovern and friends turned to that time-honored psychological tradition known as blaming the victim. You know, the attitude that says "how could she have been jogging alone in Central Park that late?"

Sam Silverstein

McGovern attacked Jenifer first for not knowing off the top of his head the vital stats for every person, place or thing under his jurisdiction. The carnivorous committee wanted to know the number of layoffs that would result from the thin budget produced by the House of Representatives last month, and he whiffed. Sorry 'bout that, Pat. But she really snapped, interrupting her rude, personal attack only to interject "I don't mean to be rude," or "this isn't to single you out personally."

Smelling blood, the other members of the committee spanked Higher Ed for, among other things, paying its professors relatively well, granting financial aid and actually having trust funds and administrators. Jenifer left the stage doing a passable Calvin Schiraldi '86 Series impersonation, head down, cap in hand.

It seems that our state legislature, especially its Ways and Means best and brightest, is paralyzed by the thought that George Bush sidestepped the election with his "read my lips" stand on taxes. The political rush around here to hop on that callous bandwagon has looked like gate A at an English soccer match.

Even if the taxpayers of this state have been studying the fine details of George Bush's lips, taxes must be raised. Money must be found (see: taxes), schools must be funded, and legislators must show some semblance of spine through all of it. Elected people are, well, elected as leaders in providing the services of the Commonwealth, and not as fearful slaves to political or financial self-interest. And not to be rude.

Historic will rebuild from ashes

By Richard Sasson
The Patriot Ledger

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a $100,000, three alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"It's a disappointment," he said. "The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. But we'll come out of it. The club will survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the clubhouse during the fire which started near the club's function room at 4 a.m. yesterday, leaving only the shop and a section of the locker room standing, John J. Sheehy said.

ARTS & LIVING

Exhibit takes a look at long-repressed culture

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

Living in a society that encourages cultural diversity and allows for the unabridged freedom of thought and expression, it is difficult for most Americans to understand the frustration and anger of those whose talents are continually restricted by repressive governments.

The 1980s has been a decade of martial law in Poland, and as a result, a vibrant assortment of literary, artistic and educational culture has been forced underground. It is through this independent movement that Polish writers, artists and educators have been able to flourish.

Independent Culture In Poland: An Exhibition, is an exhibit of underground Polish culture, and is on display today and tommorrow at the Student Union Ballroom. The exhibit is comprised primarily of underground books, newspapers and magazines put together on primitive presses and mimeograph machines since martial law was declared on December 13, 1981.

Even after martial law was lifted, the risk of arrest and imprisonment was genuine. The touring exhibition of independent culture represents a victory not only for the people of Eastern Europe, but for those all over the world who have been repressed, said Andy Soborski, a graduate student in environmental engineering.

". . . people are seeking a movement toward justice, both economic and social. Things have become a lot more open in the past few months," Soborski said.

In recent years, Polish authorities have employed house searches, imprisonment, employment denial and heavy fines as means of halting the progress of those seeking freedom of expression. The underground publishing movement, however, has now become a fixture in Polish life, and the government no longer holds a monopoly on the printed word.

"The government in effect has lost," Soborski said. "They need popular support. The resistance has forced the government to come to agreement with them."

The Exhibition is being hosted by M. Kerry Kennedy, Executive Director of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Center for Human Rights, and Pawel Bakowski, an Amherst resident and Curator of the Exhibition.

"This is a very timely exhibit," Soborski said. "We're seeing the political changes in Eastern Europe. Everything at the exhibit will be updated . . . it will be very interesting."

In addition to the Exhibition, there will be a panel discussion tonight at 8 p.m. in the SUB. Professor Stanley Blejwas, from Central Connecticut State University will moderate the discussion, titled Solidarity Looks At Perestroika. Featured speakers will be Dr. Andrzej Bryk, from Jagiellonian University, Cracow; Michael Kaufman, former New York Times Warsaw correspondent and Ewa Kulik, from the Solidarity Trade Union in Warsaw. Closing remarks will be provided by Rep. Kenneth Lemanski.

Preceding, and immediately following the panel discussion, pianist Gian-Franco Ricci will perform selected pieces from Chopin. Both the Exhibition and panel discussion are free and open to the public.

Local band looks to break with underground sound

By MICHELLE MELLMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Yet still another underground rock sound is hitting the Pioneer Valley music scene. The Sane, a four month old alternative rock group who classify themselves as an "all-American band," appear monthly at both Katina's in Hadley and Sheehan's in Northampton.

"We'd like to let people in the Five-College area know what we're all about," said Randy LaBelle, the band's lead vocalist and guitarist. "We see a lot of really good talent coming out of this area in the future."

The drummer, Don Dodge, and bassist Ray Neades also hope the music scene opens up more to the underground sound of local unsigned groups.

"Although we're not commercially acceptable on FM radio right now, we hope to be within the next few years," said Neades.

The band considers itself a cross between The Smithereens and Husker Du, influenced heavily by the Boston rock sound.

"We have different musical tastes within the group," Dodge said. "I think that's what gives us such an unusual sound and great power potential," he added.

In spite of The Sane's underground rock sound, the crowds they draw cross all lines with a variety of musical preferences. "It's weird. It all depends on the club . . . like when we play Katina's, the crowd tends to be more mainstream," Neades said. "But no matter what type the crowd is, it's pretty important that they like loud music, we love volume."

The Sane plans to cut a compilation album with other local groups to benefit the Western Mass Independents (unsigned groups). The album, which includes tracks from The Lonely Moans and The Malarians, is scheduled for release this summer by Chunk Records.

In addition to giving support to other local bands, The Sane hopes the record will help them get signed with a record label. "Hopefully this summer, after cutting the demo tape, we will get signed," said LaBelle. "We'd like to be on the Boston scene by early fall."

There will be a promotional benefit held for the album this Friday night at the Elks Club in Greenfield. Doors open to the public at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $5.

The Sane also plans to release an album of their own by the fall. The tentative title, SITONAPOTATOPANOTIS was chosen because it may be read from left to right or vice versa. The band members are currently producing a video for a cut off the album titled "Familiar."

The Sane will be playing with The Ray Mason Band at Katina's on May 18. Information about upcoming releases and show dates can be obtained by contacting: The Sane, c/o Randy LaBelle, RFD - 1, Box 65, Charlemont, MA 01339.

It's only right that Frogs deserve an Ex rating

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Drukman's dementia praecox is beginning to get on my nerves. He claims that I've been abusing my position, altering his "subversive" columns for mass consumption, when the fact of the matter is I wouldn't touch his stuff with a ten foot bargepole and usually leave the chores of correcting his creative spelling and grammar to some office menial.

DISC JUNKIE

I've already told him that he should seek professional help, but all I get in response is some incomprehensible gibberish about "enforced 24 hr. listening to "Yes Sir, I Can Boogie"". Now I'm no Freudian - baldness and pointy beards don't run in my family - but Drukman's problem sounds suspiciously like castration anxiety to me.

Which is something that could never be said of today's first band The Frogs, whose new album It's Only Right And Natural (Homestead) rams its musical statement of gay supremacy up the arsehole of contemporary society, and in particular the obsessive-compulsive "squeaky clean" (no communicable diseases) music scene that has arisen out of 80's AIDS hysteria.

The Frogs are like no gay band you've ever heard. Forget the watery political statements of The Communards, or the casual nihilism-chic of The Pet Shop Boys (although I do like P.S.B.), these boys tell it like it is. This record is about love, sex, drugs, perversion and depravity in the gay community, and it presents its manifesto in hard, plain language refreshingly free from the nervous rhetorical safety devices of conventional gay pop. I mean, can you seriously imagine Erasure coming up with a song like "Been a Month Since I Had a Man"? They're not adverse to subtlety either, as displayed on "Homos" where brothers Jimmy and Dennis Fleming explain to Mom why they were always "into sports."

And musically the duo eclipse most of the pretty-boy brigade, coming out of the plastique synth pop/HiNRG closet, with a sparse twisted folk/rock style that owes more to Daniel Johnson and Eugene Chadbourne than it does to Soft Sell. Check out the eerie, shivering strings on "Thank God I Died in The Car Crash" which may or may not be about Teddy Pendergrass, or the chiming guitars of the hopelessly catchy "Dykes Are We" reaching new levels of lyrical wonderfulness with the line "You know damn well what I do on Saturdays." The Frogs celebrate their sexuality, carving a gloriously sensual poetic realism out of innuendo and dirty words, a flying fuck in the face of a repressed and homophobic society. Gay power begins here.

Also still grinding out uncompromising music and ideology are Dutch indusrial punk/thrash/noise terrorists (dontcha just love these labels kids?) The Ex, possibly the most unrelenting band in the universe. Listening to these happy-go-lucky politicos' new album Aural Guerrilla (Homestead) like having your skull bashed in by thousands of people with machine hammers, who don't understand that there is only so much you can do with a person's head by way of reducing it to tomato puree. This is where Test Department meets Big Black. Forget noise "trips." To The Ex, drugs are just more bourgeoise middle class self-indulgence.

Aural Guerrilla will not disappoint anyone who "enjoyed" Too Many Cowboys. If you're one of the uninitiated, be warned. Its incredible sonic machine-gun assault will pin you down, drill its way into your head forcing you to listen, until you forget you ever had a choice in the first place.

And once again we have a case of form matching content. The Ex's words are just as hard as their music, stomping all over self-obsessed American white brats looking for cheap thrills on "Meanwhile at McDonna's" and ripping up the ignorant masses of shallow style-fascists on "Fashionation," kinda like the Daydream Nation in fact.

The Ex have no interest in identification. They push themselves further and further away from the accepted bounds of alternative music. Like the Fall before them, their weapons are repetition, scrambled messages, economic facts and figures, corporate profit margins that become insanely meaningless in the midst of the cacophony, the sound of an absurd self-destructive society propelled towards extinction by its own mindlessness. The Ex challenge the listener to think, to regard personal decisions as political ones. Their ability to convey capitalist madness through the intensity of musical image is worth a thousand R.E.M hippy symposiums on U.S. foreign policy. All you've got to do is open your ears, and the mind will follow.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

Less revenue worsening state budget deficit

BOSTON (AP) — Confirming reports of sluggish state tax collections during April, the Dukakis administration's top budget officer said yesterday that the drop of 1 percent in revenues will add about $100 million to the current budget deficit.

Edward Lashman, the state secretary of Administration and Finance, insisted that the Massachusetts economy remains healthy, but said tax receipts are falling because consumers are saving rather than spending.

Largely as a result of the 11.3 percent drop in sales taxes compared to last year, the monthly revenue from all taxes combined fell $108 million short of projections. According to Lashman, the news means that the deficit is more likely to be about $250 million rather than $150 million.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who has been pressing the Legislature for four months to pass a $131 million tax package to close the deficit, promised to keep cutting spending but said the April figures underscore the need to raise taxes.

"It's not going to be done with smoke and mirrors. We've got to stand up and be counted. We cannot do what's been going on in Washington for eight or nine years, we keep running up these massive deficits," Dukakis told reporters at a news conference.

The governor, who met yesterday morning with House Speaker George Keverian and Senate President William Bulger on budget issues, said he was "pleased" with the progress made by Democratic leaders.

Lashman told reporters that he pressed the case for taxes during the morning meeting, but he refused to describe the legislative leaders' response.

With two months remaining in the fiscal year, tax receipts have grown 4 percent ahead of the pace of April 1988. Lashman said he now expects to end the year on June 30 with a growth of about 6 percent, rather than the official forecast of 7.4 percent.

As a result, he said, the government will have to revise its forecast for tax growth in the coming fiscal year as well. With a smaller opening base of taxes and a slower pace of increase, Lashman said, taxes will be below the levels assumed in the $12.3 billion "no tax" budget for next year that passed the House.

James Braude, head of the liberal Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, said a tax increase was now inevitable, because even the pared-down House budget would require one.

But Richard Manley, who heads the business-oriented Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, said the message of flagging revenues is the need to reduce the size of government. "Either you face up to it now, or you have major tax bills every other year," he said.

The April tax figures contained some sobering news. Overall taxes fell 1 percent below April 1988, which was considered a "soft" month. Corporate taxes last month fell by 13 percent, and withholding taxes from earned income dipped by 2 percent.

In addition, Revenue Department officials noted that the sales tax would have fallen by more than the 11 percent posted if not for a 5 percent increase in the cigarette tax imposed last year and stepped-up enforcement of tax laws.

Lashman said the administration was considering an array of more than a dozen options for closing the current budget gap, but he refused to provide details other than to rule out layoffs and long-term borrowing.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You are deeply affectionate, faithful and inclined to be jealous. Recognize that others may not want as much "togetherness" as you do. Being too possessive could jeopardize a promising relationship. Back off.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Tension dissolves when you face the truth about someone. A clean break may be best. Delightful friends give you a glimpse of what life is really about. Be open to new experiences.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Romantic fires started now may be difficult to put out. Do not let a job opportunity pass you by. Disciplined work will lead to both emotional and financial rewards. Meet deadlines on time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A restless streak could cause confusion and disenchantment within a relationship. A promising alliance comes to a standstill. Issuing ultimatums will only make things worse. Let others feel free to come and go.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Tie up loose ends early today so you can concentrate on an exciting business venture. You are in line for special consideration at work. A promotion or raise is possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You could receive exceptionally good financial news soon. Look for it! Move ahead with an idea to convert a hobby into a business. Consult marketing experts before making and final decisions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Donate items you no longer need to use and you will receive as much pleasure as you give. You set yourself an impossible task when you try to choose between two suitors overnight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) It is fine to ask others for advice on financial matters, but only yourself makes effort on your part will turn things around for you. Build savings for investment purposes. Postpone buying luxuries.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Assert yourself and you will win long-overdue benefits. You may even get a raise or new position. Your reputation grows, attracting wider public recognition.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) A powerful romantic relationship will survive no matter what you do now. Once you make a business decision, stick to your guns. Travel is best postponed. Remain close to home base.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Indications of what you could become are stimulating. You marshal your energies to tackle work projects that will bring you prestige as well as cash. Others are eager to see you in action.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Business has its ups and downs but continues to prove rewarding. Follow your own instincts no matter what others suggest. A good evening to socialize with old friends. Stroll down Memory Lane.

ed the lead for keeps. Wanner led the frame with a single, then moved to third on a single from Deb Schilling. Vaillencourt scored them both with a double, then crossed the plate herself on a single from Jen Miller.

As UMass ran up its six run total, Temple kept pace, scoring single runs in the fifth and sixth and rallying for a pair more in the seventh.

Club Sports

The University of Massachusetts rugby team split a pair of games with Williams College this past weekend. The varsity A team beat the Ephmen by four points, 28-24. The B team, however, lost by two trys, 6-0.

Last week, the Minutemen dropped a pair of games to Amherst College. The A team lost 23-9, and the B team fell 13-0.

Correction

There were two factural errors in yesterday's story on the UMass crew teams [page 14]. For the record:

There were three undefeated teams going into the weekend's races (not two), two of the three did lose but the third, the women's varsity eight, won on Saturday and Sunday. And, the jayvee women won their race, beating Mt. Holyoke.
